

BRIGANTINE ADDENDA IS WRECKED IN SOUTH SEAS

Well Known Coaster Goes Ashore at Palliser Bay, New Zealand, and Crew Narrowly Escape Death.

The wreck of the brigantine Addenda, belonging to the Simpson Lumber Company and well known at this port, is described at length in the Wellington (N. Z.) Times of Monday, October 17. Copies of the paper were received yesterday in Astoria. A picture showing the position of the wrecked vessel appears in the Weekly Press, a paper edited by a brother of L. E. Selig of this city. From the picture, it would appear that the brigantine is resting easily on a sand beach, and that there is a chance that she may be floated.

The Addenda went ashore on October 14, in Palliser bay, which is a notorious graveyard for ships. She had sailed from Lyttleton on the 13th and encountered stormy weather that night. The following day the gale increased in fury and much of the Addenda's canvas was blown away. The vessel escaped going ashore on the rocks in the bay and was driven up on the sandy beach, where great seas engulfed her.

Death stared Captain Harry Astrup and his men squarely in the face, and heroic measures were necessary in order that the lives of the men might be saved. Captain Astrup called for a volunteer to swim through the surf to a small strip of land that projected out into the bay. The second mate, named A. Lundin, stepped forward and offered to make the effort. A line was tied around him and he plunged into the roaring sea. Lundin made fair headway for a time, but was caught by a current and carried away from shore. Then Charles Malm, an able seaman, volunteered to go to Lundin's assistance. He reached the struggling mate and the two men commenced their heroic struggle to make the beach. Finally they succeeded. The captain then fitted a bowline and one by one the men were sent ashore through the breakers.

But the troubles of the mariners had only just commenced, for they were miles from human habitation and subjected to the fury of the elements. After enduring great hardships they came upon a dwelling and there secured assistance.

Captain Astrup is known to many shipping men here and the news of the disaster to his vessel will be read with regret. The Addenda registers 627 tons and no insurance is carried on her. She has frequently loaded at the Knappton mills. Despite her small registry, she carries something like 1700 tons, being built specially for the lumber trade. Whether or not she has since been floated has not been learned.

THE INDIANS ARE INJUNS.

Tickled to Death Because Commercial Didn't Have Thanksgiving Game.

The dispatch herewith reproduced appeared last night in the Telegram. The information contained in it is true, but perhaps a slight explanation is necessary. Commercial really regarded Chemawa as too weak to make a respectable showing, and even the Indians are willing to admit that the score would have been something like 40 to 0 against them. Chemawa was booked when the team was thought to be a strong one, but its poor showing prompted the Commercial manager to cancel the game. Later on, when Commercial lost its date with Puget Sound university, through the destruction of the clubhouse of the Seattle team, Chemawa was wired, but replied that it had a game. It was a business proposition with Commercial all the way through, and while the Indians may feel aggrieved because they were considered weak this season, Commercial can not be blamed. The interest of the sport demands evenly matched teams, and everything indicated that Chemawa would have absolutely no chance against the local clubmen. The dispatch, which indicates the "Injun" in the Indians, indicates the "Injun" in the Indians.

Chemawa, Ore., Nov. 24.—The Indians are rejoicing over the fact that the Astoria club is without a game today. It is only through good fortune that the Indians have a game themselves. Early in the season the Thanksgiving game was arranged between Chemawa and Astoria. After the defeat of the Indians by Albany college the management at Astoria wrote, cancelling the game. They stated that they did not consider the Indians a strong enough team, and would arrange a game with another team.

Accordingly they arranged a game with the Multnomah second team.

Early this week the game fell through on account of the inability of the two clubs to reach an understanding.

In the meantime Chemawa had secured a game with the first team from Fort Stevens. Tuesday the manager of the Chemawa team received a telegram from Astoria begging for the Thanksgiving game. Owing to the previous date, this was impossible. However, had Chemawa had no game, they would not have Astoria after the latter's treatment. The manager wired that they had a game for that date, and expressed his "sorrow." Yesterday a second telegram was received. Astoria offered Chemawa her expenses and 40 per cent of the receipts if she would come.

To settle the matter once for all, Chemawa telegraphed Astoria: "We play Fort Stevens. Are glad you have no game." The Chemawans are elated over their victory over the Astorians, and are not trying to conceal their joy.

MYSTERIOUS RUSH ORDERS.

Steamer Howard Makes Unusual Night Trip Up River.

Among those who knew of the matter, rush orders received by the quartermaster steamer Major Guy Howard last night caused a ripple of excitement. The Howard received orders to leave at the earliest possible moment for Goble, carrying Lieutenant Cooper and another officer. The information obtainable was to the effect that the presence of the two officers was required at the Vancouver field meet today, but the other details of the situation led to the suspicion that this was but a blind. The Howard had been at Vancouver with the Fort Stevens football team, and the orders, it is stated, contained the stipulation that no expense should be spared in preparing her for the trip. She is required to reach Goble by 5 o'clock this morning, so that the officers may catch the Northern Pacific into Portland. The officers were sent for too late to permit of them taking the night train or a night boat, and the Howard's special trip has resulted. The steamer was at the Elmore dock when the orders came and she hastily departed for Stevens, and then left up the river. Just what the commotion really signifies will probably develop today. It is possible the officers may be required for the field meet, but the "spare-no-expense" feature of the orders created the impression that there was "something doing."
