ENDERBY'S WAY By SIDNEY H. COLE Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

It was eminently characteristic of Enderby. He had known Miss Carmichael scarcely three months, but to Enderby's mind time was not always measured by the clock. They were walking homeward from the opera. Miss Carmichael had insisted that they walk. It was a perfect night, and the distance home was short. When they entered the quiet street where Miss Carmichael lived, Enderby fell into a brown study. The girl beside him was talking in sprightly fashion of Nibelungen and Rhine maidens, all of which was lost to Enderby's ears. They had reached the substantial Carmichael residence when Enderby came suddenly from his reticent silence—so suddenly, indeed, that he interrupted the girl in the middle of a sentence.

"Look here," said he, "I'm a pretty steady going sort. I've a fair income and a steadily growing clientage. I want an establishment of my own. Why wouldn't it be a good idea for us to marry?"

Miss Carmichael was so thoroughly astounded that she found no reply until they had reached the top step and Enderby was struggling with the latch-key.

"Good gracious!" was all she managed to gasp even then. "I mean it," said Enderby. "Think it over if you like. I don't necessarily expect my answer right now."

"Good night, Mr. Enderby," she said rather coolly, and the door swung shut behind her.

Enderby strode down the street toward the club with never a quail in his mind and never a tremor beneath his immaculate shirt front, but that was Enderby's way.

After that he saw Miss Carmichael as usual and for several weeks made no allusion to the matter. At first the girl was furtively uneasy in his presence, but as the weeks went by and he said nothing more she regained her usual composure.

One late March evening as they sat before a blazing fire in the big hall Enderby suddenly took up the conversation where it had ended weeks before.

"Have you thought it over?" said he. Now, this question was entirely irrelevant to the talk of the moment.

"Have I thought what over?" Miss Carmichael asked.

"Marrying me," said Enderby tersely. "I'm a very practical man, not romantle and that sort of thing, you know. Still, I flatter myself I'd make a fairly good husband. You'd have a house and servants very much like this establishment here."

Miss Carmichael's eyes opened wide. Was ever a girl wooed in such cold blooded fashion? she wondered. She spoke calmly, yet her voice was not as firm as she intended.

"Mr. Enderby, I thoroughly respect you, but as for marrying you"— She paused, and Enderby went on. "Perhaps you want to think it over a little longer. That will be all right. I'm not one of the impatient sort. Good night."

He slipped on his overcoat, took his hat and stick and departed, leaving the girl divided between amazement and wrath.

Spring was well advanced before Enderby broached the subject again. It was one evening just as he was about to depart from the Carmichaels, and it was with the usual abruptness.

"Have you decided to marry me yet?" said he. Miss Carmichael looked at him steadily, and this time her voice was very firm. "No, Mr. Enderby, I have not. Nor do I think I ever shall decide to marry you."

or to the theater or to vespers on a pleasant Sunday. His manner was quite unchanged. It was as if nothing whatever had happened.

Summer came, and the Carmichaels left the city for their pretty country place in a quiet village. Every second Saturday Enderby came down to dine with them. The portly head of the house of Carmichael entertained a genuine and outspoken liking for the reserved young man, and Mrs. Carmichael was voluble in his praises.

Miss Carmichael said nothing, but she recognized some potent fascinatant about this strange, reticent man and his stranger method of wooing. Sometimes it amused her. Sometimes it angered her. And yet his plain words and his frank strength appealed to her more strongly than she cared to admit. What manner of man was this? she asked herself countless times, and each time a definite answer was wanting.

That Saturday afternoon Miss Carmichael was alone in the house. At 4 o'clock a tree agent came to the door and by persistent efforts to sell his goods was making himself very obnoxious. At that juncture Enderby came up the walk. He heard the voices in the hall and took in the situation at a glance. He laid a hand none too gentle on the agent's shoulder.

"You're annoying the lady," said Enderby severely. "Is that any of your business?" said the man, with heated insolence.

"None at all," said Enderby cheerfully, whereupon he took the man by the collar, marched him to the porch and helped his undignified retreat to the gravel walk.

The agent rose from the gravel, sputtering profane invective. Enderby started down the steps.

"Haven't had enough, eh?" said he, and something in his tone and expression forced upon the irate agent's understanding a realization of the better part of valor. He fled the field in inglorious haste. Enderby returned to the hall.

"Oh," said Miss Carmichael in tones of relief, "he was positively insulting. I'm so glad you came."

"That's all right," said Enderby. And then—perhaps something in her voice suggested the course—Enderby tempted fate once more.

"Going to marry me?" he said. Miss Carmichael laughed hysterically.

"Of course I am, you funny man," she said. "How on earth can I help myself?"

Enderby looked puzzled. "You're quite sure you want to?" he asked doubtfully.

"Very, very sure, dear," said Miss Carmichael gravely.

"Good!" Good enough!" said Enderby, with hearty satisfaction. It was Enderby's way.

Honey Making Wasps. The card making wasp of Brazil, it is said, manufactures a honey the use of which is not without danger, as it occasions vertigo. In South America large quantities of honey are collected from the nests built in trees by an insect which is supposed to belong to the bee tribe. Then there are the bamburos, whose honey whole towns in Ceylon go into the woods to gather.

There are also in our own country ants which construct underground nests, but their chief peculiarity is that in addition to the ordinary inhabitants of an ants' nest there is a special class called honey bearers. These live entirely in the nest and receive the food collected by the workers, store it up in their globular abdomens, which are capable of great expansion, and regurgitate it in the form of honey when any of their comrades desire to be fed. They are, in fact, merely living honey bags. Another species of honey ant has been found in Australia, and a species of cocoon in India provides itself with a small quantity of honey.

Wellington and His Steward. Even the "Iron" Duke of Wellington had his difficulties with the servant question. Captain George R. Gleig wrote of the great soldier: "As to his table, it was in every respect such as became his position. His wines were excellent, though his cellars contained but a scanty supply at any given time. The oldest could not have been more than a couple of months in his possession. Of his reasons for thus acting he made no secret. 'At one time,' he said, 'I used to do as others do—gave my orders to the house steward and handed him the money to pay the bills as he presented them to me. This went on for a year or more, when to my surprise and disgust I got letters from tradesmen humbly begging that I would settle their accounts, which had been long standing. I found on inquiry that the fellow had been gambling with my money, leaving my creditors unpaid. From that day to this I have made it a point to pay my own bills and to keep my accounts with tradesmen as short as possible.'"

Japanese Courage. The little men of Japan can give the world many thrilling stories of courage and many of clever stratagem as well.

One of the powerful nobles of the old time was forced to flee from his enemy in haste. He hid in a barrel and was borne away by servants, who, meeting the enemy, declared that the barrel contained food.
