LOVE OF LIBERTY

Norwegian Residents Will Celebrate Anniversary Tonight.

AT FISHER'S OPERA HOUSE

Anniversary of the Nation's Freedom Marks an Important Epoch in the History of Our Scandinavian Neighbors and Residents of Astoria.

Tonight, at Fishers' opera house, will be celebrated a day near and dear to every Scandinavian resident of Astoria. To the people of any country the anniversary of their deliverance from bondage is a day of supreme inspiration. Patriotism, like all things else, lives by what it feeds on. To recall the struggles and sacrifices that led to liberty; to know them as the virtues of your own ancestors, to preserve the memory of them as a stimulus and incentive for the generations yet unborn, has always been the dearest and highest privileges of the human race.

Virtue is maintained quite as much by the contemplation of virtue in others as by the native strength of the principle in ourselves. We look to the strength and courage of our ancestors with pride and glory, and we inwardly resolve to be no less than they. Equally do we resolve to honor their memories, to perpetuate their glorious traditions, to defend and maintain the blood-bought heritage of freedom which they have bequeathed us. The anniversary of a nation's freedom gives opportunity to drink anew from the magic fountains which fired the hearts and braced the limbs of those who have long been silent in the dust.

From the sodden and belittling cares of everyday life we are lifted as on the wings of angels to the realm of higher being, where we can see something of the grandeur latent in man when he casts aside the iron mail of selfishness and identifies himself with the hopes, the aspirations and the interests of a whole people. It has been suggested that celebrations by foreign-born citizens of the United States have a tendency to impale their sentiments of patriotism to their adopted country. Nothing could be more erroneous. The sentiment of liberty is not peculiar to this country. It exists everywhere. So far from working to the injury of American citizenship, these celebrations work to its benefit. There is not a Norwegian who glories in the freedom of Norway who does not equally glory in the freedom of American. Is there a man on earth so obtuse as to think that impulses and hopes that are common to good men everywhere can be lessened anywhere by reviving their inspiration? The more a man loves freedom in Norway the more he will love it in America. The hatred of despotism is not the especial heritage of any one people.

Freedom has but two sources of real sustenance and perpetuity: intelligence and virtue. As people become intelligent they demand liberty; as they become virtuous they are fit for it. A community of men who can maintain free government at home can always be trusted to sustain it abroad; but in all this their sentiment toward both native and adopted country must needs be alike. It is simply an expression of the virtue that elevates as against vice which degenerates.
