ple of Oregon, was played by the band.

While the last notes of music reverberated through the grounds, and before the great applause which greeted the rendition of the piece had subsided, President Goode again arose to address the people. His appearance on the rostrum was the signal for renewed cheering, which continued for several minutes. Finally in response to his appealing gestures, the president was permitted to begin his address. In welcoming the people of the "Old Oregon" country and the people of the United States as the guests of the exposition, Mr. Goode said:

The states of the Pacific border today give hearty welcome to the world to share with them in the felicitations upon the triumphal achievements on these shores of aggressive American civilization and the signal victories of peaceful conquest.

The people of the Pacific northwest desire to give Lewis and Clark their venerated place in history as surely as they do honor to the man who urged the exploration of what he called "this respectable breadth of country lying westward of the Mississippi river," and it may be that in history President Jefferson's reputation will stand higher for the quiet, determined persistency with which he brought about the Lewis and Clark exploration of the country west of the Rocky mountains than for the acquisition of the territory of Louisiana.

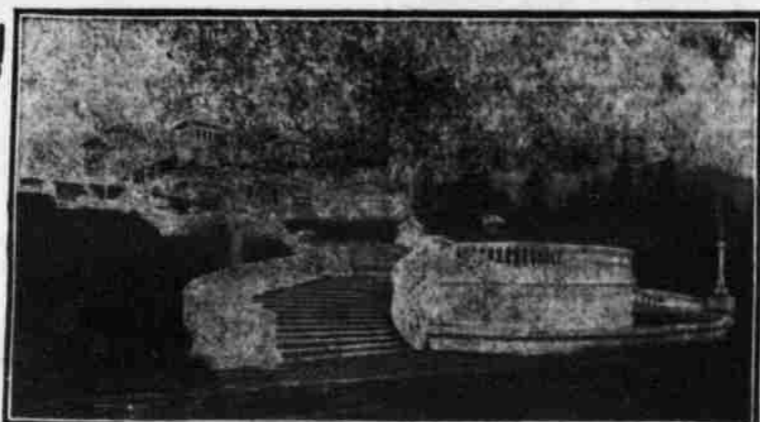

In all enterprises of great moment contributing benefits to the many at the cost of the few, it is gratifying to feel that the law of compensation discloses always a more worthy and moving cause than mere material gain. When we dwell upon the journey through the continent wildernesses and deserts and think of the explorers pressing onward ever in the face of obstacles that would have turned back many men actuated by the highest resolution, "fiction lags after truth, invention is unfruitful, and imagination cold and barren."

Perhaps the most enthusiastic ap-

We commemorate an important event in American history. We pay tribute to the intrepid explorers who made their arduous expedition up the Missouri, across the Rocky mountains, down to the Pacific, and pointed the way to this land of incomparable opportunity. Their fame is secure where the deeds of men of heroic mold are forever recorded. They were the fore-runners of a high order of civilization in a territory which, prior to their venturesome enterprise, was terra incognita. It was a wilderness, inhabited by the aborigines, into which no white man had entered; it has become the seat of empire—of vast commercial power. We look upon their work with genuine admiration and grateful appreciation.

The expedition which we celebrate was in the command of Capt. Meriwether Lewis, who had been the private secretary of President Jefferson, and of Capt. William Clark, a brother of George Rogers Clark, who rendered such signal and lasting service on the frontier during the American revolution. The small band who composed the expedition possessed the qualities essential to a successful issue. They were young and full of enthusiasm. They had great powers of endurance, they had tact, and they possessed moral and physical courage of a high order. They went about their difficult and important duty in a manner to insure the best results. They not only went to explore an unknown region, but to make such report of their discoveries as would be of the utmost practical value to the world. There was no misadventure and no failure. They proceeded with good judgment, with patience, and with firm resolution. Their appointed task was fraught with far-reaching consequences and beset with unknown dangers. The expedition lay far beyond the frontier and the reach of aid should grave perils arise. We must measure the undertaking from the environment of the time in which it was laid. The courage which calmly braves unseen perils is of a higher order than that which confronts known dangers.

This exposition has risen as an expression of the gratitude of the people for what brave men wrought for hu-plause which greeted any of the notable speakers of the day was accorded Hon. George H. Williams, the venerable mayor of the city of Portland, whose 82 years of life have not sapped the fire of youth nor detracted from his ability as a public speaker.

Hon. Clarence D. Clark of Wyoming, representing the United States senate, was the first government official to extend felicitations upon the opening of the exposition. Senator Clark was attentively heard, his address being frequently interrupted by bursts of hand clapping.

Hon. Jas. A. Tawney followed Senator Clark on behalf of the federal house of representatives. Like his predecessors Congressman Tawney was heartily applauded on his appearance on the speakers' stand and that his remarks were pleasing was testified to by the hand-clapping and cheering which followed the concluding sentences of his address.

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, speaker of the house of representatives, in his own apt way, brought out the greatness of the exposition and the sentiment for which it stood. The notes humor of the speaker were several times made apparent during his discourse, the orator being obliged to cease talking several times to permit the handclapping to die down.

At this period of the program the steadily increasing enthusiasm of the multitude found expression in a tremendous ovation to Vice President of the United States Charles W. Fairbanks, the personal representative of President Roosevelt. Through his previous visits to this city, notably during the last national campaign, Mr. Fairbanks has become somewhat intimately known to the people of the city and state. So vociferous was his greeting that several attempts to commence his address were ineffectual. When he was at last able to make himself heard above the noise of the greeting Mr. Fairbanks said:

President Roosevelt has taken a very great interest in the Lewis and Clark exposition from its inception, and it is at his request and on his behalf, I have the great honor of participating with you in these opening ceremonies.
