J. S. White, secretary of the H. F. Cady Lumber company, Omaha, Neb., and a man of considerable prominence in the lumber field, spent Sunday inspecting the Tongue Point mill.

"I arrived in Portland Saturday after spending some time in the Puget Sound cities. Learning that the Lewis and Clark fair would be practically closed on the Sabbath I took advantage of the opportunity and came here on a night boat.

"The only one I found open, however, was that at Tongue Point. In the hands of W. R. Hume I was royally entertained.

"What a beautiful stream this is. It's grand and inspiring and you must have a rattling good city here, from what I have seen of it.

"Mr. White will return to the East, leaving Portland Wednesday. His firm is one of the largest lumber concerns in the country, with main offices at Omaha and operating extensively in Alexandria and Cocodrie, La.
