Notable Women

It would surprise women typists in general to be told that when the writing machine was first invented operating it was thought to be an occupation for men only and not suitable for the feminine sex. Yet such is the fact. The first women operators were considered their sex, as indeed they were. But by their skill and tact they won the way for all their sisters. Now the swiftest typewriters in the world are acknowlour national pride to know they are been asked to address the convention. American women also. Some of the best to be found anywhere are in the government departments at Washington. Among these Miss Mary E. Pretty, a Philadelphia girl, has clicked off 26,400 words in a day of six hours.

machine is Miss Olive Cameron of Teunessee, also a clerk in the Washington and typewriters in the government departments is $1,400. A very rapid typewriter, too, is Mrs. Margaret Cunningham of Trenton, N. J., who learned city. She has learned to strike the keys of her machine without looking at them, which gives her a great advantage. Mrs. Cunningham's specialty is ered a good day's work.

A Heroic Nurse.

At 10 o'clock one evening recently Margaret Galvin, the night nurse of direction of the diet kitchen. She ex- ly obliterated the damp spots where the cused berself to the patient she was mosquitos were in former years bred by attending and hastened to the kitchen. The woodwork there was on fire, ignited from an imperfectly insulated electric wire. Miss Galvin snatched a blanket and tried at once to smother the flames and pull the wire with its burning coating away from the wall. She could do neither. She received a severe shock and burned her hands severly, but ran instantly to the tele-
