

YOUNG FOLKS' STYLES.

An Era of Pretty Dressing For the Coming Men and Women.

Never have children been dressed so comfortably and so daintily as now. The materials are such as can be washed many times, and the very making of the garments is simple, but there is something in the whole plan that makes them charming.

One dainty little dress for a girl of fourteen had two tucks at the edge just the width of the hem and a set of clusters of plaits on the upper part of the skirt, which gave the lower portion of the skirt a pretty flare.

Wash Frocks.

A very neat and dainty wash frock for girls of any age from ten to sixteen was made of white swiss with coin dots. There were two wide bouffes of the swiss set on a foundation of plain muslin and an upper skirt of the dotted goods.

White dresses, white hats, made washable; pink or blue sashes, white shoes and stockings and tiny white openwork gloves make the little ones look so very dainty and sweet that "happy is he that hath a quiver full of them."

MISSIE'S AUGUST COSTUMES.

Lower wreaths are not quite so popular as the other kinds, but the variety allows each taste and purse to be suited.

For very dressy wear there is a frock of dotted white mull. The skirt is made over a slip of white taffeta. At the bottom of the skirt is a deep shirring of lace heading the wrought edge. This forms a deep flounce. The waist has a bertha made of the lace, edged in turn with a ruffle of fine narrow lace.

For Lighter Moments.

For play there is a surprising array of little garments. There are creeping pants of jean, overalls for tiny boys and the same made with one or two feminine touches for the girls.

For older boys the old style gathered knee pants are seen. This is a comfortable style, and the pants do not get so much strain as the tight ones have. Pretty cutaway coats, with vests and a cloth cap to match, go with these suits.

six inch hem, and this was headed by a line of the finest Mexican drawn work—a part of the dress, wrought in and not set on. OLIVE HARPER.

LIFE IN NORWAY.

Interesting Facts About the Land of the Midnight Sun.

Norway has a population of only eighteen to the square mile and is the most thinly settled country in Europe. It has a rugged, mountainous surface, narrow valleys and immense barren tablelands.

There are public registry offices for servant girls, who sign a contract for six months' service. The average wage earnings of Norway are said to be only $88 a year, and the average expense of living is less than in any
