

Gossip About A Few People of Prominence

Harry Lehr, Entertainer of the Smart Set—Ida Tarbell and Standard Oil—Speaker Lowther—Magistrate Deuel of New York.

HARRY LEHR.

THE more staid members of Newport society by playing dolls with noted social leaders and assisting Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs to escort a rag doll through the streets of the fashionable summer city. Some of his adventures were more strenuous. Once he had a fight with a bear on an ocean steamship. On preparing to retire he discovered the bear occupying the berth in his stateroom, and, supposing it to be an animal that had escaped from confinement on the deck below and wandered to his apartment, he gave a cry and ran with more haste than dignity to the cabin. It transpired that bruin was stuffed and had been placed in Mr. Lehr's berth as a joke.

Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama is eighty-one years of age and Senator E. W. Pettus, the other Alabamian in the senate, is eighty-four. Both are lawyers and ex-Confederate veterans.

The most ardent baseball "fan" in the diplomatic corps in Washington is his excellency Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, who is spending the summer at Amherst, Mass. Thirty years ago the Chinese minister to the United States was a resident of Amherst while preparing for Phillips academy at Andover, and the late Senator Hoar in introducing the diplomat from the orient was fond of alluding to him as one of his constituents.

SIR CHENTUNG LIANG CHENG.

He was considered at the time a star player. He was the hero of a game with Phillips Exeter academy in 1881 and made a three base hit with two men on bases. This gave the Andover team a commanding lead. The minister has never forgotten this "three bagger." His oldest boy, Master Ardee, a stocky, round headed youngster promises to be quite as famous a baseball player as his father.

The Chinese minister regrets that sports are not more popular in China. He believes that strenuous games are a good thing to develop manhood and hopes to see them introduced in his native country.

Miss Ida M. Tarbell is ever ready for the fray when it comes to a battle with the Standard Oil company or its founder and chief representative, John D. Rockefeller. She was called on by Mr. Rockefeller's attorney to explain or retract some of her statements in a recent magazine article, and the way in which she complied with the request did not leave the case much better for the oil trust magnate. Miss Tarbell insists that, however good as business policies the Standard Oil methods may be, they cannot be made to tally with the Golden Rule, the foundation principle of the faith to which Mr. Rockefeller claims to be attached. Miss Tarbell's friends predict that she will be the Nemesis of Rockefeller and Standard Oil to the end of the chapter.

MISS IDA M. TARBELL.

Much of the secret of this writer's success as a historian is said to lie in the thoroughness with which she does her work. When she determined to devote her talents to historical writing, she went to France and for three years studied hard under the foremost French authorities on his tory, supporting herself meanwhile by writing for American publications. When a recent came to her to write a life of Napoleon for an American publisher and be ready in thirty days with the first installment, she had the courage to accept the commission. To many it might have seemed like fools stepping in where angels fear to tread, but events proved that Miss Tarbell was by no means unequal to the task.

James William Lowther, the new speaker of the British house of commons, is a member of one of Great Britain's oldest families. When Queen Elizabeth was reigning Sir Richard Lowther, an ancestor of the speaker, was high sheriff of Cumberland, and even then he was the thirtieth knight in succession. The speaker's brother, Gerard Lowther, was formerly secretary of the British legation at Washington and is now England's minister to Morocco. Speaker Lowther is notable as an apostle of the policy of protection, which in England is known as fair trade, as opposed to free trade, the traditional economic policy of England. He occupies a unique position in that he is the first Conservative speaker of the house of commons in seventy-two years.

JAMES WILLIAM LOWTHER.

Mr. Lowther was born in 1855 and educated at Eton, King's college, London, and Trinity college, Cambridge. He has been a member of parliament for twenty years and represented Great Britain at the international conference in Venice in 1892. He will hold office until the dissolution of the parliament in which he was elected and, though nominated by the government, is regarded as an officer of the house and draws a large salary. In England the speaker on taking office is allowed $5,000 to defray the cost of his robes, wigs and other frills and fixings. In addition to this, the nation makes him a present of 2,000 ounces of silver plate for his table and two hogheads of claret for his cellar. The master of the buckhounds is required to provide him with a good fat buck and doe. The Clothworkers' company yields him an annual tribute of a "width of good broadcloth." Rent free, he occupies as his official home a lordly residence at Westminster palace.

Justice Joseph M. Deuel of New York, whose name has been conspicuously mentioned in connection with scandals growing out of the sale of the book entitled "Fads and Fancies of the Four Hundred," is a city magistrate and has been a prominent member of the New York bar for a quarter of a century. He is one of the principal stockholders in Town Topics, a weekly publication, and receives a salary for work done in the Town Topics office. Edwin M. Post, a New York broker, alleges that Charles H. Ahle, who bore JOSEPH M. DEUEL, a letter from the managing editor of Town Topics, endeavored to compel him to pay $500 for a copy of the book under penalty of seeing a scandalous story about himself published in Town Topics. Post paid Ahle five marked $100 bills, and Ahle was at once arrested by a policeman who had been an invisible spectator of the interview. Justice Deuel has made a good magistrate, it is said, and is given much credit for the part he played in securing the establishing of the children's court in New York, which has been a very successful feature of judicial work in the eastern metropolis.

George Bernard Shaw, the famous Irish playwright, critic and novelist, is a strict vegetarian. His athletic recreations are cycling and swimming. His plays, "Candida" and "John Bull's Other Island," have been very successful.

Judge James B. Dill, who gave up an income of $300,000 a year from corporation clients to accept a salary of $3,000 as a member of the New Jersey court of errors and appeals, occupies a unique position. He is famed as a trust lawyer and has participated in the formation of some 700 large corporations, and on that account the action of Governor Stokes in appointing him a judge was criticised in some quarters, but, on the other hand, several representatives of powerful corporations were strongly opposed to his appointment, this opposition being based on a belief that his course as a judge would be antagonistic rather than favorable to their interests. It is said that as a corporation lawyer Mr. Dill became convinced that combinations of capital had grossly abused their privileges and ought to be regulated. In order to participate in some degree in bringing to an end the methods of "high finance" which have aroused so much criticism he was willing to forego the large profits of a private practice and become a judge drawing the comparatively modest sum of $3,000 per annum. The change puts him in a position where he must pass upon the misdemeanors of corporations he has himself created.

JAMES B. DILL.

Judge Dill, his wife and his daughters are all enthusiastic automobilists. So fond of the sport are all four members of the family, in fact, that when they were lost in the Adirondacks last summer their chief concern was to their three big touring cars. Judge Dill himself drives one of the automobiles, his elder daughter the other and a groom the third. They are now on a tour which will cover a large part of the northwestern states.
