OFFICERS OF THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL ASTORIA REGATTA

Men Who Have Worked Willingly for the Success of Astoria's Unique Enterprise.

The portraits appearing on this page are of a few of the men who have planned and engineered the Eleventh Annual Regatta. They have worked unceasingly and conscientiously for a number of weeks and the entire credit for the organization of the splendid spectacle which Astoria presents to the public today is due to this representative body of merchants. These gentlemen have not hesitated to sacrifice their personal interests, to the interests of the regatta and the city.

tures will be truthful portrayals of the lives of these immortals. True, their recognition has been tardy, but it may be said, in way of extenuation, that it will, at least be ample. Promptly at 10 o'clock this morning the reception to Princess Sacajawea and her retinue will begin. The princess will be impersonated by Mrs. Laura Malar one of Astoria's handsomest young matrons. Mrs. Malar will be characteristically garbed in aboriginal robes. She will be attended by Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, George Noland and A. M. Smith assuming these roles. The ceremonies will be accompanied by pomp worthy of both the city and the occasion. And the initial ceremony will not be wanting in proper manifestation of patriotism, the rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner" being one of the first numbers on the program. The princess and her attendants will be received in person by Mayor Surprenant. Following, United States Senator Charles W. Fulton, a statesman who enjoys an enviable reputation as a post-prandial orator, will deliver the opening address and it may be expected that he will burst forth into a strain of brilliant oratory that will meet with hearty approbation on every hand.

At 11 a. m., the Redmen will participate in their important and appropriate part of the festivities. It will require but little imagination to carry one's thoughts to the earlier epoch of this marvelous Pacific Northwest on gazing at the impressive tableaux which will be offered on the barge in front of the grandstand. Princess Sacajawea, after receiving the keys of the city, will be escorted to her wigwam by Chief Concomly and his tribe of braves.

The great parade this afternoon will be by far the most brilliant pageant ever seen in the streets of the city. Fanfare of trumpet, the stirring melody of martial music, the rattling of the snare, the dull thud of the bass drum, and the fierce blast of fishhorn will add to the festal air. Probably 2,000 men will participate in the parade, representing the military, civic and fraternal bodies.

At night the event of the first 24 hours of the regatta will take place—the marine parade. This will be typically a regatta feature. Steamers of the United States lighthouse service, coast liners, river boats, the quarantine and customs boats, small steamers, gasoline launches, yachts and fishboats, made attractive with thousands of Japanese lanterns and manned with hilarious crews armed with horns and accordions will be seen in gala array. Under the able supervision of Grand Marshal Dr. Bayliss H. Earle and his assistants, Messrs. Babbidge and Goodell, the marine parade will be a never-to-be-forgotten sight. All in all, the first day of the regatta will be most pretentious, but it will be no more so than the days following.

The visitor will find the city in fitting attire. That the business men have stood loyally by the committee in making the enterprise a success is well attested by the appearance of their places of business. The decorations compare favorably with those of any previous regatta and in many instances considerable taste has been displayed. Some of the window displays are exceptionally good. Apparently a good-natured rivalry has existed among the merchants, this being exemplified by the originality of the decorative schemes and their excellence.

When not busy viewing the parades or other features of the regatta, the visitor will do well to meander into the country fair, where he will find on exhibition a representative display of the products of Clatsop county. It makes little difference whether the pilgrim is agriculturist, artisan, speculator or professional man—he will find much to interest him, for there is no county in the State of Oregon where opportunities are so diversified. A visit from local people will not be amiss—the display has already astonished more than one Astorian.
