TOO DIFFICULT

In a Pennsylvania town where the friends I should a prim old Quaker opiate one day attended the marriage of his grandnephew, a young person who had in the course of his twenty-two years received much sound discipline at his hands.

The old lady was at her best on this festive occasion, and as a point in the wedding-breakfast her young relative looked over at her with a longing smile.

"I'll tell you why they never married, Aunt Peter?" he said, leaning.

"That is soon told, William," said the old Quaker, calmly. "It was because I was not as poor as you are."
