PORTLAND MARKETS

Complete Market Reports Corrected Each Day Giving the Wholesale Prices of Commodities, Farm Produce and Vegetables.

Portland, Oct. 13.—Quietness still prevails in the local wheat market, as farmers are not inclined to sell, preferring to take the chances of a further advance later on. Exporters say they have been paying more for wheat than foreign markets justify, and that lower prices are more likely to prevail when the market settles down.

"Farmers are usually hard to deal with on a rising market," one exporting firm reported today, "but when prices begin to fall again the growers will be all eager to sell. They have become accustomed to high prices for wheat, and so feel somewhat disappointed this year."

A carload of California onions was received this morning by a front street firm.

"We have been unable to buy Oregon onions, although the crop here is large," was the explanation furnished. "The weather has in a measure prevented the sacking and storing of onions, which have been already pulled and are lying in the field."

Local onion growers, however, are not willing to let go at this time, as they think they can get more for their stocks when the California and Nevada product has been exhausted the ensuing winter.

Chickens were a drug on the market today, and commission men were willing to shade quotations considerably in order to get rid of what coops came in. The chicken market has been in bad condition for some time, but receipts did not fall off, although shippers were aware of conditions in many instances. Up country storekeepers receive a great many chickens in trade, and these have to be sent to Portland, regardless of what they will bring, as they cannot be kept any length of time.
