PORTLAND MARKETS

Latest Quotations in the Portland Markets.

Complete Market Reports Corrected Each Day Giving the Wholesale Prices of Commodities, Farm Produce and Vegetables.

Portland, Oct. 16.—Firmness continues in the sheep market, as a result of unwillingness on the part of woolgrowers to let go. Quotations now range from $3.75 to $4.25 per 100 pounds for mutton sheep in Portland, and drovers expect the market to continue firm until New Year at east.

"There are thousands of fat wethers throughout the middle west," a prominent livestock dealer said today, "and these sheep will be kept until shearing time next spring as a result of the high prices promised for wool. By the close of the year fodder may become scarce or prospects for high prices of wool disappear, and then we will have cheap mutton again."

"In eastern Oregon and Washington strong efforts will be made to hold flocks over until spring, although the crowded condition of the ranges will render this difficult in many places. Sheep ranges are growing smaller from year to year on account of settlers taking up public lands, while the heavy increase in flocks last spring will render them still more crowded. Hay, however, is cheap, and unless an unusually severe winter should intervene most of the flocks will be kept over in some shape. In the meantime butchers must depend upon getting fat sheep from the small herds kept west of the mountains or in California."

Farmers are not inclined to sell their potatoes at prices now offered, as they think values will advance later on. Dealers in the city find difficulty in obtaining what potatoes are needed for local trade and for shipping to northern points. From 60 to 65 cents per sack is the highest offer made by exporters who have agents out in the potato-growing districts adjacent to Portland. These agents say they are only able to partially fill orders, although there are a good many potatoes now being housed in the bins. The local market is considered firm and is largely supplied by farmers who deal direct with the uptown retailers.
