PORTLAND, March 12.—Some anxiety is felt on the part of potato dealers as to the effect of the present cold weather on stocks stored in bins and on docks in the Northwest. From outside points the news comes that the thermometer registered as low as 20 degrees this morning, and that potatoes have been frozen in several instances. The result of the cold snap will not be known, however, until after the thaw, when the potatoes injured will speedily rot.

Potatoes that had been left on the open docks and on Front street sidewalks were found to be frozen next the surface of the sack this morning, and they will have to be assorted before being placed on the market.

Front street sidewalks were clear today of perishable products, such as fruits and vegetables, as dealers did not care to risk exposure.
