

BOWSER FITS FLY SCREENS.

"Mrs. Bowser has been fooling with this door she'll hear from me in a way to make her tired."

"You've got it wrong side up, sir," ventured to say.

"Ah, yes. Some of my absentmindedness. I was thinking about those chickens again. If Mrs. Bowser tried to put up you switch her off. The door is right side up now and fits like a glove."

He soon had the hinges screwed fast and the door swinging back and forth, but I was holding out for what came next. Most any sort of a baldheaded man can rehang a screen door, because there are all the marks of last year, but when you come to put on the spring to keep it closed—that's different. Mr. Bowser went ahead with the greatest confidence in himself, whistling as he worked, but when the spring was on and he stood aside the door flew open.

He Was Puzzled. "More of Mrs. Bowser." I heard him growl as he tried to make the door stay shut, but I didn't tell him wherein he had made a mistake.

Instead of taking the spring off and turning it end for end, what does he do but take the whole screen off and turn the outside in. It wouldn't fit that way, and I told him that it wouldn't, and then he let go of his temper and shouted at me:

"I told you right at the start that it was a conspiracy! When Mrs. Bowser comes home!"

"I can put that door on in five minutes."

"You can't in 5,000 years."

With that he picked it up and sent it flying over the fence into a neighbor's yard, but in stepping back his foot struck something and he went over backward and hit his head against one of the clothesline posts. I ran out to him with a scream, and in five minutes there were a policeman, a tramp and three or four boys around him, and I was pouring water on him by the painful.

Then it was that Mrs. Bowser arrived and quietly took charge. We got him into the house and upon the sitting room lounge, while some one turned in a fire alarm and some one else called an ambulance. I can't tell how long Mr. Bowser lay unconscious, but his speech was plain when he suddenly opened his eyes, scrambled off the sofa and yelled out:

"Have I been going over Niagara falls or has Mrs. Bowser been trying to murder me again?" M. QUAD.

LIFE ON EASY STREET.

It is an ideal place and worth striving for.

There are more strong limbed, clear headed, brave hearted people living on Easy street than anywhere else in this broad land, and their prime condition is the natural consequence of living there, for, although you may not have thought of it, there is a close relationship existing between good health and the consciousness of getting on well in life.

You can see this for yourself if you will note how a strong man droops, like a frost nipped flower, who by some mistake loses his position, his possessions or the esteem of his fellows, one or all. Shylock made a hard bargain with a borrower, and in his effort to foreclose the bond lost his cash and won the contempt and scorn of all men.

Mental disturbance followed, including physical ill being, and, staggering away from the judge's bench and clutching at the air, he cried, "I am not well!" But you need not go back so far to get an illustration.

And on the other hand you can see by observing for yourself how the gain, or even the anticipated gain, of a home on Easy street will make a sick man well, quicken dying hopes into life and change the water of sorrow into the wine of joy.

Recent literature has reminded us how a happy turn in the tide of the affairs of Josiah Wedgwood, afterward to become the world's great pioneer pottery artist and inventor, raised him from an invalid's couch and started him upon the road to affluence and distinction among England's industrial princes.
