DECK AND DOCK NEWS

Wallula, Rough and Needless Trip in the Gale.

Ship Stronsa Leaves Up for Portland
—Shipping News from Knappton
—Bark Molinas Due Down En Route to Europe.

Captain Reed, of the tug Wallula, entered port yesterday morning at 9 o'clock and a reporter of this paper caught him at the Kinney dock, where he took on fuel oil, an hour later. He says that he left the bar at 12:25 p. m. on Friday last on his quest for the four-masted bark reported twenty miles northwest of the Heads and flying signals of distress, and which was supposed to be the British bark Iverna out from Acapulco, Mexico; he bore away to the northward and got within about five miles of the vessel, which was standing to sea with her topsails, main upper-topsail and foresail set and drawing full and no sort of sign of distress about her. The sea was rising and it was blowing half a gale and as she was in good shape, the Wallula was headed back for the bar, which she reached after dark. Captain Reed was compelled to batter around all of Friday night in a big running sea, with the tug smashing through heavy seas all night long and the wind blowing fiercely, with occasional rips of lightning to liven up the situation. He says it was one of the worst nights he ever spent off this bar, and that the tug was practically under water all the time. The seas would catch her on the down-sweep and as she buried her nose in them they would dash over her in wild volumes that flooded her every few moments. And the trip in over the bar yesterday morning was no child's play, as the breaking seas were among the heaviest he ever encountered. The captain was naturally put out by making such a cruise after a vessel reported to be in distress, and finding her as capable as any vessel afloat, to hold her own, and holding it. He was willing to do anything for anyone in trouble, but the irksome and long-drawn task set him, in this instance, was so much time and labor thrown away. He could not make the vessel's name or numbers, but he is convinced that it was the Iverna, as she answered the description and was in ballast. He thinks she will show up off the bar in due season and get in all right.

Customs Inspector Charles Haddix returned yesterday from the wreck of the Peter Iredale and says the vessel is in no worse shape than she has been, with all hands standing by, and living high on the good things furnished by the kindly women-folk of the country-side.

The French bark Genevieve Molinas is on her way down the river, outward bound for Queenstown with a cargo of grain.

The schooner Churchill has finished

The barkentine Chehalis is expected in every hour from the Bay City, and will load out from Knappton on the return trip at once.

The British ship Stronsa, Captain Jones, left up for the metropolis yesterday morning on the hawsers of the Harvest Queen.

The French bark Marechal d'Castries, went up the river yesterday on the lines of the steamer Oklahoma.

The German ship Nereide came down from Portland yesterday morning on the Harvest Queen's lines and will take sea dispatch as soon as she can get it. She is bound for Europe with a full cargo of grain.

A deeply laden, large steamship was reported off the Heads at sundown last evening, evidently bound in.

The Oklahoma arrived down with the schooner Henry Smith yesterday morning, and the latter will get to sea and San Francisco as soon as the storm abates.

IN THE CITY THEATERS.

The Salt Lake Tribune has the following to say about the Beach & Bowers Minstrels due here on Tuesday night of this week:

"The large audience which assembled at the Grand theater to witness the entertainment given by Beach & Bowers' minstrels, Thursday night, again emphasized that which is a notable characteristic of Salt Lake theater-goers, that they will patronize most generously a meritorious performance. The show was a pleasing one throughout. The singing was above the average, while the comedy part was excruciatingly funny. The Beach and Bowers minstrels comprise an aggregation each one of whom is an artist within himself. Such artists as George L. Wade, James Stuart, Robert Tipple and others, are fun-makers and pleasing entertainers of the highest order. Their performance last night was of that entertaining character that the S. R. O. sign will be in evidence the balance of their short season at the Grand. Beach and Bowers come direct from New York and is one of the oldest and best all-white minstrel shows now traveling in this country. The old gags which usually constitute the stock in trade of mediocre minstrel companies have been wisely eliminated and people go away with the pleasing satisfaction that they have witnessed something not only out of the ordinary in minstrel performances, but something entirely new, neat and clever. Beach and Bowers' minstrels at the Grand the balance of the week, including Saturday matinee." Box office open tomorrow, Monday, at 11 a. m. Prices 25, 50, 75 and $1.00.

night at 8:15. It is an excellent comedy-drama and well worth seeing. Tomorrow night, the company will present "The Man Outside," a drama, in four acts, the plot of which is as follows: "Gilbert Elton," (Alf Layne), a bank cashier, and "Henry Howard," (Bert Frank), a lawyer, are bosom friends—a modern example of Damon and Pythias, in fact. Howard is engaged to be married to "Alice Ashton" (Anna Jordan), daughter of the banker. Ashton's bank has been robbed of $200,000. Elton witnesses the robbery and discovers that the thief is none other than Alice he follows her, sees where she secretes the money and takes possession of it. Then, determined that his friend shall not marry a woman so unworthy, and not wishing to break the father's heart by disclosing to him his daughter's crime, he avows himself to be the thief and restores the money only on condition that Alice shall become his wife, to which the latter, to save her father from ruin, consents. "Charles Frye" (William Hutchinson), a detective, called to investigate the robbery, discovers on the floor of the bank a lock- et and ring dropped by the robber; these are important clues in a murder mystery of five years previous, and upon his confession Elton, while relieved of prosecution for the theft, is at once arrested for the greater crime. But appearances are oftentimes deceitful and circumstantial evidence is not always proof of crime. "Kate Marlowe" (Daisy D'Arva), the friend and companion of Alice, makes a confession that clears away the mystery and all ends happily.
