Roosevelt Favors Retention of Land By Government.

URGES CONGRESS TO ACTION

Points Out in Long Message the Need of Legislation to Preserve Pasture Lands, Coal Fields, and Tim-

WASHINGTON, Feb. ident Roosevelt today Congress a long message calling attention to what he calls the "Urgent need of legislation affecting the different/ phases of the public land situation in the United States.

He advocates the conservation of coal and other fuel resources on lands still belonging to the government, saying that henceforth the nation should retain its title to its fuel resources, urges government control of the western public land pastures, with a system of small grazing fees, etc., and asks for an appropriation of half a million dollars, immediately available, in adition to present estimates, to aid in detecting and preventing land frauds. He contends for a system of government leasing of its mineral lands as public utilities.

The President calls attention to the importance of such legislation as would provide for title and Jevelopment of the surface land as separate and distinct from the right to the underlying mineral funds in regions where these may occur, and the disposal of those mineral fuels under a lease system on conditions which would insure to the benefit to the pub-Hc. "Mineral fuels, like the forests and navigable streams, should be treated as public utilities. This is generally recognized abroad. In some foreign countries practical control of a large portion of the fuel resources was allowed years ago to pass into private hands but the existing governments are endeavoring to regain this control in order that diminishing the fuel supply may be safeguarded for the common good instead of being disposed of for the benefit of the few.

"In our own western states and territories the scarcity of both water and forests has rendered necessary their preservation as public utilities and the preservation of the forests for the purpose of conserving both the waters and the timber supply, has come to be recognized as the wise and proper policy of the federal government. the West is relatively much smaller than that of the forest and the proper conservation of these fuels is a matter of far reaching importance. This government should not now repeal the mistakes of the past.

"Let us not do what the next generation cannot undertake. We have a right to the proper use of both the forests and the fuel during our lifetime. right of our children. If this movement sells its remaining fuel lands they pass out of its future control. If it now leases then we retain control, and a future congress will be at liberty to decide whether it will continue or change this policy. Meanwhile, the government can inaugurate a system which will encourage the separate and independent development of the surface lands for agricultural purposes and with the extraction of the mineral fuels in such manner as will best meet the needs of the people and best facilitate the development of manufacturing industries.

I am sure that objections to this system are being urged. It is claimed that so large a part of the coal in some of the western states has already passed into the hands of certain large corporations that parties endeavoring to operate under a lease system other coal deposits would be unable to compete with these corporations and therefore that the fuel deposits still belonging to the government should asso be allowed to pass into private ownership presumably into the hands of the same or other large corporations. It is also claimed that the reservation of the fuel supplies still belonging to the government would raise the price of forests is raising the price of lumber in the West. It should be remembered that the best and most accessible bodies of timber in the West passed into private ownership before the forests reserves were established: that while the price of timber has advanced in the West, it has advanced still more in serves; that supplies of timber are today being shipped from the West to the markets of the Mississippi Valley, and even to foreign countries, and that the probability of obtaining future suplies of both timber and mineral fuel in the West at reasonable prices. will be much greater with a large portion of both the forests and the fuels under the control of the government than if this control should pass to private parties. To secure cheapness of timber and fuel for the moment at the cost of ruin to our own children would surely be a suicidal policy.

"It may be fairly claimed among the the friends of the leasing that it will facilitate the working, under favorable conditions, of coal deposits for local markets, by miners without large capitid, as no land purchase money would be required and small royalty charges would be paid out of the earnings; it will facilitate larger operations, as the leases are made sufficiently liberal in the matter of time, and other conditions, to insure healthy compe tition and meet all real demands; and yet in all cases the general supervison of the government it is believed could be such as to prevent waste in the extraction and handling of these fuels; the system can be operated in such manner as to prevent the evils of monopolistic control; it will permit the government to reserve from general use, fuels especially suitable for metallurgical and other special industries; and by it will enable the government to protect the public gainst unreasonable and discriminating charges for fuel supplies.

"Already probably one half of the total area of the high grade coals in the West has passed under private control: including both the lignite and probably aggregate not less than 30,- tifled. 000,000 acres of coal fields. With the remainder of lands containing mineral fuels, reserved and leased by the government, there will be ample opportunity to determine in the near future, which of the two systems-private ownership or the leasing system with general government supervisionwilli best protect the interests of the people and thus promote the permanent development of the West.
