A QUESTION OF HEREDITY

At one of those British colonies where criminals were sent for a term of penal servitude two men, Professor Dixon and Dr. Hardeman, were discussing problems of heredity which fell continually under their observatiou. Professor Dixon was speaking. "I do not admit your claim, doctor. that environment has an equal effect with beredity. At least, to change a hereditary criminal by environment we must begin in the earliest childhood. and then it will not in all cases be pos-taint." "You are wrong, professor, I will take a middle aged criminal, remove him from temptation, impress him with the heinousness of crime and make a good citizen of him."

sible to eradicate the hereditary

"Such impression is at times impossible. I once endeavared to reform man who had tried to kill his father. He told me that his father ad killed his grandfather and the randfather had tried to kill the greatandfather. Ten years after the first ttempt, and when I believed I had changed him, my man made a second

"And I can cite a case per contra right bere in this penal settlement. Peter Hull and Eliza Wurts were serv-ing life sentences here. Peter was wenty-two when he came here, and liza was twenty. They had lived at ome in the very worst part of London. rom childhood they had been accus-med to crime. It was forcordained hat they should become criminals, but was not forcordained that they uld remain such, any more than it foreordained that a poisonous berry thall always remain poisonous. It may be cultivated, grafted, transplanted, till it is sweet and of delicious fla-

"So it has been with Peter and Elisa. They have not had a field needed for in experimental case, but they have ad sufficient to produce a marked hange. Transplanted to this colony, bey were removed from their homes in the alums. Then both were given tick-its of leave. They went out of prison ach to live in a little home, to breathe e pure air of heaven, to thrive in the warm sunshine. A vegetable garden or each put forth green sprouts. Fruit roes and flowers budded. Within the rindows dainty white curtains gave a heery look to each house, and the fur-liture, if of plain manufacture, was lways kept varnished.

"Peter could not have done all this had it not been for the help of Eliza It was she at least who made the curtains for him and showed him how to hang them. It was she who made a white valance for his bed. He furnish-ed the material from which she made ed the material from which she made him sheets, pillowcases, napkins. In short, she did all those things that women know how to do, and Peter did many things for her. He spaded her garden, repaired her house and her furnifure and often made her presents of things she needed and could not afford to buy, for, while she could make money go further than he, she could not make it as easily.

"There came the little god and whispered in Peter's car: United you can

"There came the little god and whispered in Peter's ear: 'United you can both do better. You can be more free to make money with Eliza at home to take care of your house, mend your clothes and have your meals ready for you when you come flows. There will be more money, and it will be applied to better advantage.' This was not all the god whispered. Peter thought it was, but it was not. The boy spoke things both to Peter and to Eliza which had no reference to what was practical. Eliza's ear was more attuned to them. At any rate, she heard them, and they appealed to her.

"Peter went to her and told her what he had been thinking. She waited to hear those spiritual words that the little god had spoken to her. They did not come, but she knew by Peter's manner that he felt their influence. They went to a priest and asked him

They went to a priest and asked him to marry them.

"Were you married before coming here?" he asked of Peter. ""Yes."

"'And your wife is dead?"

"Are you sure?

"I should be; I was sent here for killing her.'
"The priest turned, walked to a window, looked out, pondering, then returned to the couple.

"'And you?' to the woman. 'You are willing to marry a man who has killed

"'He has not been worse than I.'

"'What were you sent here for?" "'Killing my busband."

"Again the priest walked away, pondered and returned. "'Well,' he said, 'if you two are willing to marry each other, I see no rea-son why I should not marry you.'

"And he did. That was twenty years ago. Mrs. Rull is now fifty years old, and her husband is fifty-two. They are as much respected as any couple who have the brand of former criminality upon them."

and Mrs. Hull had killed each other.

"Professor," said Dr. Hardeman when the two met again, "I have been converted to the theory that heredity is all powerful."

"That has nothing to do with our work in the reformation of criminals. We must go on working at the environ-ment and wait patiently for hereditary improvement, which requires genera-tions to produce."

Proper For Him.

"You announced the text of your sermon," said the cranky old deacon, "as "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth."

"Well?" replied the new minister.

"Well, it should have been, "Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth."

AMERICAN'S GET CONTRACT.

For Great Amount of Foreign Electrical Work and Construction.

NEW WORK, April 29.-American nterests have captured a number of important foreign contracts for local equipment, including a complete plant for lighting the Czar's palace at Tsarksoe, near St. Petersburg. Contracts have been obtained within the last few days for the construction and the operation of a British municipal electric traction system and for rails for one of the biggest corporation tramways on the other side.

The carrying out of the work, which calls for the shipment of turbines, etc., to England, France, Italy, Australia and South America, will represent an outlay of $5,000,000.
