In Interlaken, at the base of the Swiss Alps, one gets a fine view of the Jungfrau raising its head, veiled with snow, in apparent close proximity. One day a girl sat before an easel endeavoring to transfer the mountain to canvas. Whether it was that she had little artistic talent or was a beginner, she did not succeed in making an imposing picture.

The girl drew back to have a look at her work, sighed and dropped her palette. "Mademoiselle seems discouraged,"

But she was now painting every day with the stranger beside her. There was something in his dark, dreamy eyes, his intellectual brow, his pleas ant voice, his kindly sympathy, that charmed her. Then came a revelation. She was painting under the inspiration offlove.

The picture was finished. The girl needed money, and the stranger advised her to take it to Paris and offer it for sale. She determined to do so, and the stranger promised to meet her there and, if possible, assist her in disposing of it. They met one morning in an art store where the picture had been sent before them. There it stood on an easel, and when the dealer joined them he said:

"As soon as I looked at the canvas I pronounced it a Demond. Demond had a picture hung last season in the salon, a Mont Blanc, which is not equal to this. Besides, the style is Demond's-coloring, tone, values, all. When I came to look at the name and saw another's I was surprised.

The girl whose work had been mistaken for that of a successful artist was delighted. A color rose to her cheek, a light to her eye; a happy smile played about her lips.

"What would the picture be worth with Demond's name on it?" asked her friend.

"Twenty thousand francs."

"And with Demond's name as collaborator?

"In that case I would not give more than 16,000 francs for it." On a shelf near by lay a palette and brushes. He who was befriending the girl took up a brush and, stepping to the picture, wrote under her name that

The same evening Demond stood before Miss Barker endeavoring to make her take a check for half the price of the picture.

"How did you do your work without my knowing it?" she asked.

"I advised you to walk in the afternoon, bribing the maid at the hotel to bring the canvas to my room from yours and watch for your return."

"But you seem to have done better than your piece that has been hung in the salon."

"That was because I painted under the inspiration of 'love.' '

She turned and saw the pale face of a young man evidently in poor health. "I only speak English," she said. "I am an American."

"Oh, an American! So am L." And he repeated what he had said in his native tongue.

"I shall never learn to paint," said the girl despondently.

"Perhaps you have been too long at work. Why not leave off and begin fresh?"

"That's a good suggestion. I began the picture in the morning."

"In that case I would certainly recommend you to work on it only before noon."

"Why?"

ally one's best work is done in the early part of the day."

"Are you an artist?"

"I paint, but every one of an ideal temperament either paints a little or dabbles in writing verses or something of the kind."

Every morning after that the girl sat before her easel, and often the stranger, who sojourned-for his health -at the same hotel as she, strolled by, looked at her work and spoke to her about it, now and then venturing a friendly criticism. But the only words of encouragement he gave her were: "Don't work too long at one time. When your work looks unsatisfactory to you, leave it, and likely you will Hoch, rightfield, Nelson, centerfield. be better pleased with it when you have rested." And what the stranger said proved to be true. In the morning she was surprised that she had been dissatisfied with her work of the previous day. She would sit down before her canvas, and after spending a couple of hours with her brushes it would seem that she had undone all she had achieved the previous day. Then the stranger would come along and remind her that in the morning when refreshed she would likely again see her painting under a different influence. "Go take a walk this afternoon," be said. "Paint in the morning; stroll in the afternoon."

In this way the picture grew day by day like the mountain. The darker shadows grew deeper, the lighter blended more perfectly with them or the poticed some beauty that had appeared commonplace to her the night before, and finally the whole assumed a grandeur which delighted and surprised her.

WARRENTON, Or., April 29.-The management and supporters of the Warrenton baseball club received the greatest surprise they ever got, namely, the magnificent victory of their team over Seaside nine, at Seaside, on Sunday. A large party left here to be present at the game but there were only a few who felt sanguine of success. When the game opened the specagain in the morning when you are jators began to fancy Seaside were down and out for the day, which proved to be a correct supposition, for Warrenton won the game by the immense score of 19 to 0.
