Soldiers Who Were Afraid.

By WALTER JAMES JANES

ABOUT ten years ago a veteran of the civil war visited the battlefield of Wilson Creek in Missouri, where one of the earliest important battles of the war was fought. He was observed to be intently inspecting the stony ground on Bloody Hill, where General Nathaniel Lyon, the Union commander, was killed in the fight of Aug. 10, 1861. "What on earth air you lookin' fur?" inquired a farmer who lived near by. "Me!" replied the searcher. "Oh, I'm jist a lookin' fur my false teeth." "Where did you drop 'em?" asked the farmer, supposing that the visitor had just lost his teeth. "Well, it was right 'long here some-eres," said the veteran. "I was so had scairt when I fust went into action here in '61 that my upper plate shook clean outen my head, an' I been a-needin' them teeth ever sence." The late Stephen Crane in the story which made his reputation as a writer "The Red Badge of Courage," drew a picture of the impressions of a youth in his first battle which many veterans have declared to be a faithful portrayal of their own feelings in a similar experience. This young man went into the fight determined not to show the white feather, but as the battle waxed warm he was seized in the grip of a terrible fear and suddenly took to his heels and made for the rear. It is quite probable that if you will corner any old soldier and pin him down to absolute candor he will tell you that he was "scared to death," or words to that effect, when first he heard the hostile bullets whiz and knew that he must go forward into the conflict. General Grant candidly confessed to a highly uncomfortable feeling upon two occasions of imminent battle, one being his first experience in the Mexican war and the other his initiation in the civil war after 15 years of peace. He recorded these sensations in his personal memoirs. As to his experience in Mexico he wrote: As we lay in our tents upon the seashore the artillery at the fort on the Rio Grande could be distinctly heard. The war had begun. There was no possible means of obtaining news from the garrison, and information from outside could not be otherwise than unfavorable. What General Taylor's feelings were during this suspense I do not know, but for myself, a young second lieutenant who had never heard a hostile gun before, I felt sorry that I had enlisted. A great many men, when they smell battle afar off, chafe to get into the fray. When they say so themselves they generally fail to convince their hearers that they are as anxious as they would like to make believe, and as they approach danger they become more subdued. This rule is not universal, for I have known a few men who were always aching for a fight when there was no enemy near who were as good as their word when the battle did come, but the number of such men is small. After several years' retirement from the army Grant entered the great conflict of the sixties, his first command being the Twenty-first Illinois volunteers. He was sent to northwest Missouri, where a certain regiment was besieged by the enemy, with instructions to raise the siege. He wrote as follows: "My sensations as we approached what might be 'a field of battle' were anything but agreeable. I had been in all the engagements in Mexico that it had been possible for one person to be in, but not in command. If some one else had been colonel and I had been lieutenant-colonel, I do not think I would have felt any trepidation. Before we were prepared to cross the Mississippi river at Quincy my anxiety was relieved, for the men of the besieged regiment came straggling into town. I am inclined to think both sides got frightened and ran away." A few days later Colonel Grant had an experience which once more caused him, in his memoirs, to acknowledge that he was scared. This was after he had crossed the river into Missouri. His description of his feelings just in advance of an expected battle that did not take place has a touch of humor. This humor is quite justifiable, for the regiment of the future general was encamped at the time in the little village of Florida, Mo., the birthplace of Mark Twain, and that individual himself, then better known in the neighborhood as Sam Clemens, who had just enlisted in the Confederate service, was doing his best to avoid an engagement with Grant, as he confessed many years later. There was a Colonel Harris in command of the Confederate troops in that vicinity. Colonel Grant went out to corral Harris. This is Grant's description of what happened and what didn't: "As we approached the brow of the hill from which it was expected we could see Harris' camp and possibly find his men ready formed to meet us my heart professions, without giving up any employment that they may have. In almost all large industrial concerns of America these Schools have graduates working with the graduates of leading universities. The Schools can point to thousands of cases where men formerly working as laborers or occupying inferior positions have, through the I. C. S. perfected system of training by mail, become engineers, superintendents, managers, foreman, or heads of their own enterprises. In fact, the International Correspondence Schools make it so easy for the ambitious man, in his spare hours and at small expense, to rise to the level of the high-salaried experts that no man can now say truthfully that he lacks opportunity. The International Correspondence Schools are represented in Astoria by Mr. H. Harris, who is always glad to give any one, free of charge, information concerning any of the more than 200 courses of home-study offered by the I. C. S.

SHORT TALKS BY L. T. COOPER.

ALL WORN OUT.

This is the time of year for the "all worn out" feeling. You hear it everywhere. "I'm all worn out." Did you ever stop to think what it means? Well, it means just this; 'my liver is dull and not working properly,' - my stomach is taking too much food which it is 'not digesting properly,' I'm all clogged up from being indoors with so little fresh air all winter long, and my body is full of impurities. In consequence I'm dull, half feverish and tired all the time.' That is what 'all worn out' really means. Take a tablespoonful of Cooper's New Discovery three times a day for two weeks and the 'all worn out' feeling will certainly leave. Mr. Burger was 'all worn out' once. "For some weeks I suffered from an affection of the stomach that seemed to wear me out completely. My system was run down, my bowels constipated, I had dull headaches and although I was not sick enough to go to bed I did not have ambition to stir around. I read of Cooper's New Discovery and began using it. I am glad to say that two bottles put me on my feet and relieved every symptom of my trouble. It is one of the best systems tonics I have ever heard of." John Burger, 1119 Hopkins St., Cincinnati, O.

Charles Rogers

Relief from Rheumatic Pains. "I suffered with rheumatism for over two years," says Mr. Roland Curry, a patrolman, of Key West, Fla. "Sometimes it settled in my knees and lamed me so I could hardly walk, at other times it would be in my feet and hands so I was incapacitated for duty. One night when I was in severe pain and lame from it my wife went to the drug store here and came back with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I was rubbed with it and found the pain had nearly gone during the night. I kept on using it for a little more than two weeks and found that it drove the rheumatism away. I have not had any trouble from that disease for over two months." For sale by Frank Hart and Leading Druggists.

SCOTLAND YARD INTERESTED.

Will Search Incoming Steamers For Murderers of Father Kaspar. NEW YORK, May 30.—Father Kaspar, the Armenian priest, who was murdered in a West side tenement last Saturday, and whose body, jammed in a trunk, was found Sunday, will be buried Sunday from the Armenian apostolic church, in West Hoboken. Thus far no clue to the whereabouts of the priests suspected murderers has been found.

Advices from London say the detectives of Scotland Yard are interested in New York's trunk murder mystery and will search the steamers America and Princess Louise which left New York last Thursday, on arrival there. The Armenian colony in London it is said are inclined to believe that the murder grew out of a political plot.
