Criminals Who Revel in Torture Are Fit Subjects for the Surgeon

A LARGE and growing school of sociologists and peapologists believe that crime is a disease and that in the future the surgeon's knife, asylums and medicinal remedies will replace the gallows, the electric chair, and penitentiaries. However iridescent may be this dream of a time when morality can be contracted through the administration of subtle pills or methods akin to vaccination, yet it is a fact that in most of the monstrous crimes that have recently shocked the country, experts of the new school discover evidences of brain lesion, or other nervous and physical conditions that make the criminal an irresponsible brute an avastistic monster. The mysterious "Jack the Ripper," whose crimes shocked London several years ago, and were followed by a number of similar atrocious murders in the United States and France, is of this class and doctors are now of the opinion generally, that Tucker, Durrant and the recent woman murderers in Chicago were subjects for the surgeon and physician and not the hangman. The ignorance of the ordinary jury and the failure of the law to recognize the discoveries of science frequently result in turning loose upon society fiends in human form and sometimes in the judicial murder of the irresponsible. This matter was the recent subject of discussion and a meeting of distinguished lawyers and physicians in New York, and promises to be a vital topic at the annual meeting of jurists and medical men during the present year. While American investigators have made valuable contribution to this infant science, the principal work has been done by German and French alienists who have collected thousands of cases in the development of their theories. In the highly artificial civilization of Europe the theory of atavistic tendencies of revision to savage tribes of the race, resulting in monstrous crimes, finds a wealth of material to support it. The Lust For Blood. The delight in torture and cruelty, the lust for the sight of blood and cries of agony, the capture and subjection of women by brute force, are primary savage traits that persist in the highest civilization in atavistic forms in just the same way that the rudimentary tail persists in the human skeleton. From this point of view, a flood of light is thrown upon the cause of assaults of negroes upon white women. The classical example of a blood-lusting monster in Marshalls Gillea de Rays, who was executed in France in 1440. He confessed to the torture and mutilation of 800 children in eight years, and declared that the sight of the flowing blood, the cries of agony of the little victims as he killed them, gave him "the most indescribable pleasure." With the aid of a servant, almost as great a monster as himself, he captured or lured little children to his castle, where he locked them up subjecting them to all the fiendish tortures that his bloody imagination could devise. The bodies were burned and only the heads of a few particularly beautiful children were kept by him as souvenirs. He declared that the crimes were suggested to him by reading the descriptions in Suetonious of the orgies of the degenerate Caeasars, Nero, Tiberius, and Caracalla. Those Roman emperors experienced the most intense delight in witnessing the slaughter of youths and maidens, which they would order solely for the purpose of satisfying their lust for the sight of blood and helpees agony. Alienists now declare that Durrant the murderer of several girls in San Francisco, and Tucker, the Massachusetts murderer, recently executed were likewise victims of this mad lust for the sight of blood and helpless agony—"Jack the Ripper." Feurbach gives the case of Andreas Bichel, as typical of the "Jack the Ripper" class, which has had representatives in every civilized country. Bichel, after the perpetration of many atrocious crimes, was captured and confessed. Showing his psychological state, he said, in describing one of his murders, "I opened her breast and with a knife cut through the fleshy part of the body. Then I arranged the body as a butcher does beef and hacked it with a knife into pieces to fit the hole which I had dug for it in the mountains. I may say that while I was cutting up the body I was so greedy and I trembled, and could have cut out a piece and eaten it." "Jack the Ripper" operated during the three years from 1887 to 1889, and was never captured, although he threw certain districts of Paris into a terror-stricken panic. Ten women were his victims. In all the cases the throats of the women were cut and then the bodies slashed open and mutilated, the murderer sometimes carrying away parts of the body. Vaucher, the French "ripper" committed eleven murders, to which he confessed before his execution. He was a tramp, who had been discharged from the army as mentally unbalanced. His victims were boys, girls and women, and he operated in practically the same way as did his London prototype. Italy's "Ripper" Case. Italy had a "ripper" case in Vincenz Verzeni, born in 1840. He confessed to the murder of many women and girls covering a period of many years, during which to avoid the suspicion of crime, in his confession he said that it gave him the most exquisite pleasure to throttle his victims and drink their blood particularly if they struggled, and showed fear and pain. He declared that the impulse was irresistible. Another phase of this monstrous mental condition that seeks pleasure in the shedding of blood and the infliction of pain is seen in the many cases of vitriol throwers and so-called stabbers. Nearly every American city of any size has had its experience with them. For several years a vitriol thrower has been active in Baltimore, his victims almost always being girls, upon whom in crowds he has dashed the contents of a bottle of acid and always escaped. The "stabber" operates with a sharp knife or dagger. Sometimes he is satisfied with simply slashing the garment of his victim, but generally his morbid desire for the infliction of pain is satisfied only by thrusting the knife into the arm or leg of the victim, then quickly escaping in the protection of the crowd. The "girl cutter of Augsburg" avoided capture for years, during which time he wounded more than 80 girls. The police records of almost every American city show records of similar cases. The "hugger," as he is known to the police, whose forte is to scare girls and women by throwing his arms about them when they are alone on the streets, is, according to alienists, a mild form of the same disease, into which it is likely to develop.

STEEL PLANT FAILS

Milliken Brothers on Staten Island Close Doors.

MILL WAS WORTH $7,500,000

Reason For Shutting Down Was That Steel Could Be Bought Cheaper Than They Could Make It—Too Far From Source of Supply.

NEW YORK, June 15.—The receivers of the Milliken Bros. corporation, which failed on Monday, have decided to close the steel mill of the $7,500,000 plant on Staten Island and have, in accordance with this determination, discharged 1500 steel workers. About 7000 persons are dependent upon the earnings of the discharged men and, as the opening of the mill is problematical, most of the workers and their families will go to other steel centers to secure employment.

The reason behind the receivers action in closing the mill was said to be their discovery that they could buy steel in the open market cheaper than they could manufacture it. The receivers have decided to continue in operation the fabricating mill. Here the rough steel beams are shaped and made ready for use on the various buildings for which the Milliken Bros. have contracts for the structural work. In this mill 1,000 men were employed. It was the erection of the $7,500,000 plant which crippled Milliken Brothers and forced the fifty year old firm to the wall. The building was a steel-making mill on tide water, was regarded as an experiment, which has been watched with close interest. Steel mining engineers have been opposed to erecting a plant on tidewater on the ground that it would be hundreds of miles from the source of supply of raw materials, iron and coal, and that freight charges on those two commodities would more than offset the saving of turning out steel close to the consumer. It was emphatically denied by representatives of the Millikens that the discharge of the 1500 men meant a failure. It was also asserted that the mill would be reopened as soon as the concerns finances were on a sound basis and the owners of the company again in command.
