Their Effects on Commercial Rise of Cities

WATERWAYS AN ADVANTAGE $

Derrick's British Reports," Standard Authority on Trade Statistics in England Sets Forth the Marvelous Commercial Rise Sinco Canal Opening.

WASHINGTON, July 11.-An illustration of what waterway development wil do for the interior cities of the United States, once the government gets its proposed program under way, is found in the latest number of "Derrick's British Reports," the standard authority on trade statistics in England. The publication, copies of which have found their way here, sets forth the marvellous comercial rise of Manchester since the opening of the Manchester canal. incidentally, it is shown that in one decade the waterway has far more than paid for itself ,although the initial cost reached the vast sum of $75,000000.

Manchester lies thirty-five miles from the sea, on the banks of the Irwell. For years the manufacturing town was form ed to play second fiddle to Liverpool, which boasted splendid docks that drew the trade of the whole world. The citizens of Manchester, however, undertook a campaign to induce the British government to canalize the river and thus give her access to the sea-

The British authorities scoffed at the dea that the Irwell, an insignificant stream, could be made an avenue of onection. They met every petition with coldness and derided the belief of the Manchester people that the canalization of the river would be of benefit COLFAX, Wash., July 12 .- Coroner D. not only to Manchester but to all En-B. "I tried the family doctor for a long as to force an increase of $120,238,370.
