PUBLIC UTILITIES

Straightening Out New York's Transportation.

BIRD LAYS A GOLDEN EGG

Gets To Work At Once And Tackles The Brooklyn Bridge Problem—The Real Cause Of War Talk Discovered According To Mr Smith.

NEW YORK, July 20.—New York's Public Utilities Commission, one of the most characteristic results of Governor Hughes' administration, which will have for its simple task the straightening out of New York's transportation, lighting and all other matters affecting public utilities, at least does not intend to be a mere political board where fat salaries will be drawn and no work done. In the very first days of its existence it has jumped into the thick of the fray by tackling the most difficult job within its jurisdiction, having already set itself the mighty task of straightening out the Brooklyn Bridge transportation service and eliminating its life imperiling crushes. It could hardly have picked any task more difficult, nor one, which if it is solved, will render the Commission more popular, for if it succeeds in this task, even though it never does anything else, New Yorkers will feel that it has justified its creation. No less than half a million people cross the bridge each way morning and night during the rush hours, and for women and children at that time to be in the rush is literally to endanger their lives. It is not by any means without danger for men either. Indeed it is reported that the three commissioners who went together for information on the scene of action bade all their friends farewell and made all their wills before starting. One feature in which the commissioners find some reason for hope, however, is the fact that the women of New York are behind them. They have already organized a campaign which will result in improving bridge conditions, making their first recommendation to the city for escalators or moving stairways to handle the crowd more rapidly and to relieve them of the very real liability to insult to which they are now subjected in the jostling throngs. Meanwhile it is up to the Utilities Commission with New York watching and willing to help it.

It has remained for one Theodore Demetrius Smith, hitherto unknown to fame though of undoubted imagination, to prick the bubble of war talk so far as Japan is concerned. Mr Smith of the recouping cognomens who ekes out a precarious living by dealing in old iron on the East Side, has sprung into notice this week through his announcement based on his knowledge of the iron and steel trade, that the whole talk of war was due to the steel trust. If war seems likely according to his story, battleships will be in demand. For these ships the Steel Trust would furnish the material. What could be more likely than that the octopus should be looking to increased sales by fermenting war talk? Mr Smith without straining his imagination at all declares that this is the secret of the whole situation, and his theory is at least borne out in part by the luncheon given at the Hotel Astor this week by the Japan Society of America to Admiral Kamamoto, at which, with distinguished representatives of Japan and the United States present, the idea of war between the two countries was deplored on both sides and labeled foolish. Mr. Smith, however, continues to pursue the even tenor of his way, admitting partly on account of his first name and partly on account of his wonderful ability in getting at the cause of the present war talk, to say nothing of his knowledge of trusts, particularly the steel and iron monster, that he would be willing to succeed Mr. Bonaparte and prosecute the President's campaign against the trusts. Meantime Mr. Smith is awaiting a letter of thanks from the more famous Theodore for exposing another side of trust iniquities.

While the bird that lays the golden eggs has never been discovered, something almost as valuable turned up this week at the Bronx Zoo, for one of the two theis, a bird closely resembling the ostrich has just laid an egg which is valued at no less than $500, or $6,000 a dozen, thus breaking all records for egg prices even when the strictly fresh produce of the common hen in winter time is considered. While this egg, the first that has ever been laid by a rhea while in captivity, would doubtless make a delectable omelette, it will not be sold to any millionaire for his table but hatched in a specially constructed incubator. In about six weeks it is hoped there will be a rhea chick added to the curiosities at the park, where things are always progressing. Indeed not content with producing such a valuable egg the Zoo statisticians have also been investigating alligator life with some surprising results. First and foremost the theory that alligators require something like a hundred years to reach any considerable size has been exploded. Even in captivity alligators reach a length of twelve feet in fifteen years. Some unique and interesting figures on their growth have been compiled which show that an alligator at the time of hatching is eight inches long and weighs one and three quarter ounces at one year it is eighteen inches long and at two years 26 inches, from which time it grows about nine inches a year in length until it reaches maturity. Basing his opinion on these figures, Mr. Ditmars, the curator of reptiles, believes that the raising of alligators for commercial purposes should prove attractive.

Even though they do get rid of more than $1,000,000 daily for drinks, and $2,000,000 for various recreations, New Yorkers are not only great spenders, but according to figures great savers as well, and that prosperity is not confined to holders of large fortunes. The deposits for example, in the Bovey Savings Bank, the largest institution of its kind in the world, have just reached a total of $100,000,000 an evidence of the fact that even in the metropolis with all its attractions persons in humble circumstances are able to lay by a bit of money as they go along. New York State now has nearly a billion and a half in its savings banks and is surpassed only by one or two of the New England states in its accumulation per capita. There is every prospect, too, that the importance of the savings banks will be increased progressively in the next few years. Massachusetts has recently passed legislation permitting its savings banks to establish departments of industrial life insurance, issuing policies of not more than $500 on the lives of its citizens or annuities not exceeding $100. The progress of this Bay State plan, which will be put into operation next November, will be watched with great interest by savings bank officials in the metropolis; for if there is any new wrinkle which can make a busy and beneficent institution still easier and more beneficial, New Yorkers want to know about it. There are, of course, people who say that the workingman won't go to the bank to get his life insured, but that he always must be teased into it by a persuasive life insurance agent. On the other hand, there are many who believe that the "over the counter" proposition will prove very attractive to the thrifter class who line up with their pass books after each pay day to leave a percentage of their wages where they know it will be well handled.

C. Parker Woodbury, who gambols and gambols daily in Wall Street will not under the axiomatic law throw any stones in the future. People who live in glass houses should not indulge in this pastime according to the saying. The saying itself is ancient, but so far as can be discovered it has been up to now without application, since nobody really lived in a glass house. That however is just what Mr. Woodbury is going to do, and whether or not the qualification is welcome, he will probably be the first person in history to whom the proverb will apply literally. Arrangements have just been completed for the erection of Mr. Woodbury's glass residence on Long Island. It is to be constructed entirely of glass blocks, twelve inches long and ten inches thick, which though translucent will not be transparent, so that the owner will not be visible and will not according to the modern application have to pull down the shades. The chief cause for the construction of this curious house is a desire for sunlight, which will come in on all sides through the glass blocks. At night when lighted by electricity it will be a glowing mass which, aside from the curiosity it will arouse, should prove a shining mark for all the insectivorous life that is attracted by light. According to the architect's report all stones will be removed from the premises.

FAMINE INCREASING.

KINGSTON, July 20.—The seriousness of the famine in Eastern Jamaica, caused by the eight months' drought is increasing. The crops have been destroyed and there has been a great loss of cattle.

The Doctor Away From Home When Most Needed.

People are often very much disappointed to find that their family physician is away from home when they most need his services. Diseases like cramp colic and cholera morbus require prompt treatment, and have in many instances proven fatal before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. The right way is to keep at hand a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. No physician can prescribe a better medicine for these diseases. By having it in the house you escape much pain and suffering and all risk. Buy it now; it may save life. For sale by Frank Hart and leading druggists.
