HE WAS A MIXER
So Young Clerk Gets Job Over Steady Man.
OUT BOOSTING FOR COMPANY

Employer Sees Him At Ball Game Talking With Merchants And Concludes That Such A Young Man Is Good Agent To Have Out On The Road.
 CHICAGO, Aug. 29.—To be a good "mixer" is often more essential to increasing one's value to his employers than to be the blue-ribbon grubber. R. E. Dunham tells this illustrative story in the Worker's Magazine:
 Goodwin and McArdle began commercial life at the same time and in the same capacity, as clerks in the wholesale provision house of John Brown & Co. They had attended common and high school together, and on graduation had discovered that their diplomas were of no practical value in securing employment.
 Both, however viewed this in a philosophical light. Their joint ambition was to "make good" in business and being short on cash and each dependent upon his own resources, they set out to find work in the same house, being lucky enough to land berths at a wage of $10 per week to begin.
 Goodwin was a taciturn individual, whose main object in life was to complete his day's work and return to his house where he had fitted up a small laboratory, and was continually experimenting in an endeavor to turn to use a number of ideas which he felt assured would be developed into inventions of such merit as to make him dependent.

On the other hand, McArdle was of a sociable turn of mind, and spent his evenings in the gaiety of youth. He had a large acquaintance, and on his small income was always in debt, while Goodwin managed to save from his meagre salary several dollars each week. Goodwin frequently was called upon to act as McArdle's banker, the latter surrendering to his friend the sum necessary to carry him over the week, which the other would dole out each day.
 In course of time, as is usual in such houses, a vacancy arose, and one of the clerks was to be chosen to fill the important position of "outside man" for the firm—that is, he was to act as general overseer of shipments, see that no consignments were allowed to remain over-time untrucked and to look out for short weights, both incoming and outgoing.
 The general manager, Page, who had spent years in the business, moved slowly in selecting the man for the place. There were 18 or 20 clerks in his employ, any one of whom would have been able to perform the duties of the job.
 Taking a lot of the eligibles, he checked them off, as he sat in his office just after the lunch hour, on Saturday. At last his choice narrowed down to two men, Goodwin and McArdle, either of whom he thought would make good at the place on the strength of his previous work. Both were good clerks, they had secured enough practical education along with the brief veneer of the class-rooms to hold better positions. And their making good was apparent, as each in the short space of a year had been advanced from $10 to $14 per week.
 Still undecided, Page closed his office door, after dismissing the stenographers for the half holiday, and started to leave the building. It was well on to 1 o'clock and the entire force of the bookkeeping department had gone. At least, so he thought until he saw a hat and coat hanging in the doorway.
 Surprised at such an evidence of industry, Page went into the rear room and found Goodwin, completely engrossed in his books and making entries with all speed. Inquiring the cause for his late stay, he learned that some invoices of goods had arrived just as the force was dismissed and that Goodwin had volunteered to enter them up before leaving. The latter took the proceeding as a matter of course and within a few minutes completed his self-imposed task, closed the ledgers with a slam, donning his coat as he stepped briskly from the store, caught a trolley car for home.
 Page was a lover of outdoor sports and there was a league baseball game that day so he proceeded to the ball park and sought his favorite position, where he could watch the breaks of the balls and not miss any detail of the engagement between the rival nines. He had about made up his mind that Goodwin was the man for the vacant position and was pleased at the thought that industry of the sort he had seen would be rewarded.
 Near him at the game sat two customers of the house, leading green grocers of the city, but several tiers of seats below his position. He noticed that they were in animated discussion of the relative merits of certain ball players, and then, to his surprise, saw McArdle take a chair by their side.
 The others immediately turned to the clerk as an authority, and appealed to him to act as umpire of the question in dispute, which happened to be the date of an extra inning contest of the year previous. McArdle had the information at his finger tips, and while the others listened respectfully, reeled off all of the desired data.

 Play progressed in the game and the merchant's began to discuss the markets of the past week, as there was a little lull in the run getting. McArdle saw his chance and put in a good word for his firm. He told the others, how Brown & Co. had saved their customers a large sum by discriminating purchases of fruits the week before, and pulled out a clipping from the daily reports showing how the prices asked by the wholesale house on a certain day compared with those on open market. The others were much impressed, evidently, and both declared that they had overlooked the point, but would be sure to remember it in placing future orders.
 After the game was over, Page approached the trio and was congratulated by them for the firm's treatment of its patrons. The following Monday McArdle went to the new job.

PROVE IT ANYTIME.
 By the Evidence of Astoria People.
 The daily evidence citizens right here at home supply is proof sufficient to satisfy the greatest skeptic. No better proof can be had. Here is a case.
 Read it:
 Mrs. Helen Lewis, of 52 Astor street, Astoria, Ore., says: "Doan's Ointment proved its healing qualities several years ago when I used it and told in a published statement the great relief and cure I obtained from it. I used it for a breaking out around my mouth and lips which had troubled me for a number of years, despite all I could do to get rid of it. My lips would crack and become sore when cold weather set in, and this lasted until it got warm again. I was finally induced to try Doan's Ointment, procuring it at Charles Rogers' drug store. In a short time after beginning to apply it I was cured of the annoyance, and have been entirely free from it since."

Eugene Wood On Babies.
 Eugene Wood writes of the New Baby in the September American Magazine. He says in part:
 "Put your big, clumsy finger into that tiny hand of his, the fingernails edged like razors. Something catches at your heart-strings. You sort of half-sob, half-laugh: 'The little snooter! Ain't he got a grip, though?' Try him with both hands on your walking-stick. (If she'll let you.) He will hang for longer than a minute before he drops. And that's no fair test either. The little fellow's pidgeontoe and bow-legged. He can put the sole of one foot flat against the sole of the other. His curving legs are ridgy. Suppose your walking-stick slanted at an angle from a thicker tree limb, around which he could clamp those calipers of legs, and press the sole of one foot hard against the other. How long could he hang on them? I do not know how many minutes by the clock, but if his mamma had carelessly dropped him from the tree-top I think he could hang on to this lower limb till she could scramble down and get him. And lest you think I'm hinting at the time when we were monkeys, I beg to be allowed to prove to you that I'm thinking of a later period than that. Crave the boon of being present when your ancestor is being bathed. His wise mother will show you the dimpling scar, 'the place the tail went in at.' He is no monkey, but a man, this ancestor of yours, though now and then a child is born that so far forgets itself as to remain a reminiscence stump.
 "The New Baby is so old that it antedates the age when human beings had decided upon a complexion. Be the New Baby American or African, Jew, Gentile or Japanese, when he arrives he is of the one color, a deep red, and fuzzy with an almost discarded fur which in a few days will be discarded altogether."

Endorsed by the County.
 "The most popular remedy in Osego county, and the best friend of my family," writes Wm. M. Dietz, editor and publisher of the Osego Journal, Gilbertsville, N. Y., "is Dr. King's New Discovery. It has proved to be an infallible cure for coughs and colds, making short work of the worst of them. We always keep a bottle in the house, I believe it to be the most valuable prescription known for Lung and Throat diseases." Guaranteed to never disappoint the taker, by Charles Rogers' drug store. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Ten Years in Bed.
 "For 10 years I was confined to my bed with disease of my kidneys," writes R. A. Gray, J. P. of Oakville, Ind. "It was so severe that I could not move part of the time. I consulted the very best medical skill available, but could get no relief until Foley's Kidney Cure was recommended to me. It has been a God-send to me."

The Limit of Life.
 The most eminent medical scientists are unanimous in the conclusion that the generally accepted limitation of human life is many years below the attainment possible with the advanced knowledge of which the race is now possessed. The critical period, that determines its duration, seems to be between 50 and 60; the proper care of the body during this decade cannot be too strongly urged; carelessness then being fatal to longevity. Nature's best helper after 50 is Electric Bitters, the scientific tonic medicine that revitalizes every organ of the body. Guaranteed by Charles Rogers, druggist, 50c.
Warning.
 If you have kidney and bladder trouble and do not use Foley's Kidney Cure, you will have only yourself to blame for results, as it positively cures all forms of kidney and bladder diseases. T. F. Laurin, Owl Drug Store.

What a New Jersey Editor Says
 M. T. Lynch, editor of the Phillipsburg, N. J., Daily Post, writes: "I have used many kinds of medicines for coughs and colds in my family but never anything so good as Foley's Honey and Tar. I cannot say too much in praise of it."
