Love the Conqueror.

[Copyright, 1907, by Homer Sprague.]

The pay clerk came to himself while the doctors were working over him. He looked around, mildly curious, and his eyes fell on Miss Stafford.

"You here! But, say, what's the matter? Where am I?" he asked feebly.

"You've been hurt, Mr. Bates—down on the keys, you know. You're at Miami now. Don't you remember the railroad extension and the hurricane?"

"Oh, yes. The others saved!"

"Not all. But I won't tell you any more now."

He closed his eyes wearily, but happily. The mere fact that the contractor's daughter had felt sufficiently interested to come to him was enough.

At first it had seemed a simple fracture of the arm, but as the days passed complications developed. There were consultations of doctors, and the question of an amputation was discussed. An attempt had been made to keep the gravity of his position from Bates, but the quick brain and keen eyes of that young man pierced the filmy subterfuges. He divined that he was in a critical condition. Then one day Miss Stafford came again. The nurse was standing near.

"I would like to see you alone a few moments," he began. Then, as the nurse slipped from the room, "Kneel down, Miss Stafford, please, so that your eyes will be on a level with mine."

She knelt, wondering.

"That's right. Now look straight at me. I want you to tell me how badly hurt I am."

Her troubled gaze met his and wavered.

"The doctors do not know yet exactly," she told him gently.

He smiled faintly, but with something in his eyes that called for a definite answer.

"Come, Miss Stafford—Kate; it's no use dodging. Look at me and out with it. I'm not a schoolgirl. Am I going to die?"

Her voice was very brave, but it hurt her more to tell the truth than it did him to hear it.

"We hope it is not so bad as that. You have been badly shaken, and there are internal complications, but the worst trouble is your arm."

"Are they going to amputate?"

"Yes."

His eyes winced, but he held his voice steadily. "They're afraid the shock will kill me—is that it?"

She nodded, her throat swelling to an impossibility of words.

He lay quiet for a time, his face turned to the wall. Her whole heart went out in a surge of passionate pity for the man so stricken, struggling along in the grimmest fight of his life. The girl had the insight to refresh from words, but under the strong impulse she leaned forward and touched his cheek with her lips. His well-hand sought hers, found it and gripped it strongly.

When he turned again toward her she was amazed to find in his eyes a shining triumph. She had looked for them to fly the flag of despair, perhaps, or brave endurance, but certainly not this.

"It's all right, dear," he said contentedly. "I have been too diffident—too much of a coward, it may be. But there was talk of you and another man, and—and I could see that he was more suitable. I am a poor man, with just my salary, and you and he are wealthy. I never spoke, scarcely dared to look. Yes, I have been a coward. In time I might have won, have—"

"I think you are the bravest man I know," she interrupted simply.

They were silent for many minutes after that, both thinking of what the end might be, the likelihood that he might be going to his death. Of the two he faced the contingency the more calmly.

"After all, death is not the greatest evil that can befall one," he told her. "The tide of her emotions was full."

"You know, of course, that I love you, Kate; that I always have loved you. It is in keeping with my weakness that I have stood back while others have pressed boldly forward to win you."

She was silent a moment, then, "Yes, I know you love me," she said.

"Almost without hope I have loved. It has been the weakling's part I have played—desiring much, hoping little, compelling nothing. Isn't that a quotation?"

"I don't know," she answered softly.

"Love is not like other things. It is not to be compelled. It goes its own way."

His eager eyes shone.

"Do you mean?" His voice was very wistful.

Her gray eyes came up steadily to meet his. "Always and always."

"You mean it, Kate? This is no false kindness because I am so ill?"

For answer her full rich lips kissed his pallid ones. He drew a long breath.

"I shall not die. I have too much to live for now. You will see that I shall come back from the shadowy valley after all. Love will conquer death this time."

And it did. Against all the probabilities of science, against the predictions of the celebrated surgeon, he rallied from the shock slowly and steadily. Love had conquered.

FRANK H. SWEET.

NATURE'S WARNING.

Astoria People Must Recognize and Heed It.

Kidney ills come quickly—mysteriously.

But nature always warns you. Notice the kidney secretions.

See if the color is unhealthy—If there are settlements and sediment. Passages frequent, scanty, painful.

It's time then to use Doan's Kidney Pills.

To ward off Bright's Disease or diabetes.

Doan's have done great work in Astoria.

Theodore Josephson, 515 Seventh street, Astoria, Oregon, says: "About five years ago I used Doan's Kidney Pills and derived great benefit. I was suffering from severe pains across my back and my loins and at times so severe that I was unable to stoop or straighten. My kidneys also bothered me a great deal, as the secretions were generally too free in passing. At last Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention and I procured a box at Rogers' drug store. I began using them and my health is now excellent. I take a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills now and then, when feeling any sign of backache and they never fail to banish the trouble."

Plenty more proof like this from Astoria people. Call at Chas. Rogers' drug store and ask what his customers report.

For sale by all dealers. Price 50c. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.
