HE GIVES SOME GOOD ADVICE

HOW TO RELIEVE CATARRH— TELLS OF PRESCRIPTION EASILY PREPARED AT HOME, TO GIVE PROMPT RELIEF.

The coming months will be a harvest for the doctors and patent medicine manufacturers unless great care is taken to keep the feet dry, also dress warmly.

This advice should be heeded by all who are subject to rheumatism, kidney and bladder troubles and especially catarrh. While the latter is considered by most sufferers an incurable disease, there are few men or women who will fail to experience great relief from the following simple home prescription, and if taken in time it will prevent an attack of catarrh during the entire season.

Here is the prescription which any one can mix: Fluid Extract Dandelion one-half ounce, Compound Kargon one ounce, Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and use in teaspoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

The Compound Kargon in this prescription acts directly upon the eliminative tissues of the kidneys to make them filter and strain from the blood, the poisons that produce all forms of catarrhal affections. Relief is often felt even after the first few doses and it is seldom that the sufferer ever experiences a return attack within the year.

This prescription makes a splendid remedy for all forms of blood disorders and such symptoms as lame back, bladder weaknesses and rheumatism pains are entirely dispelled.

As this valuable, though simple, recipe comes from a thoroughly reliable source, it should be heeded by every afflicted reader.

The Jumping Off Place.

"Consumption had me in its grasp; and I had almost reached the jumping off place when I was advised to try Dr. King's New Discovery; and I want to say right now, it saved my life. Improvement began with the first bottle, and after taking one dozen bottles I was a well and happy man again," says George Moore, of Grimesland, N. C. As a remedy for coughs and colds and healer of weak, sore lungs and for preventing pneumonia New Discovery is supreme. 50c and $1.00 at Charles Rogers & Son, druggists. Trial bottle free.

the station at Underwood, W. Va. and from there on his acts, according to his alleged confession, were as follows:

December 13, in Washington, he cashed some of the checks and money orders. December 21, he robbed a station at Bruceton, Pa. December 22, he robbed the station at Hays, Pa. He secured some interchangeable mileage books in the last two named places, which on December 3, were sold in Pittsburg. From there he went to Parkersburg, W. Va., where on December 28, he robbed a railroad station, going on December 29, to Wheeling, W. Va. On the night of the twenty ninth he went to Clarington, W. Va. where in a scuffle with Agent Hutchinson the latter lost his life. Then he jumped to Powhattan, W. Va., where a mail pouch was cut, but securing nothing of value, he stole a handcar on which he rode in the early hours of the morning five miles to Moundsville, W. Va. where he robbed the express office in the station and then took a trolley car to Wheeling. On December 31, he went to Pittsburg and a little later to Philadelphia in both of which cities he cashed express and postoffice money orders which had been secured at various places. On January 3, he robbed the station of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Waverly, Pa., and then walked from there to Ogden, Pa., and from there to Doothwin, Pa., securing by robberies in the two latter places some interchangeable mileage books. On January 8 he transferred his operations to New Jersey on the line of the Erie R. R. robbing that day the station at Fairlawn, N. J. where he secured a quantity of stamps. January 9, he spent at Garfield, N. J. robbing the station there that night and jumping the next day to Carlton Hill, N. J., where he secured some money orders from an express station. A long jump to Strasburg, O. followed and from the 20th to the 25th January he robbed the stations at Strasburg, Justice and Era, O., securing express money orders which on January 26th he cashed in Chicago. Then followed a trip to San Francisco. On Feb. 8, he appeared in Waterloo, Neb., where he robbed the station of express money orders and mileage books, some of which he sold in Omaha and Chicago within the following week. February 26 he robbed a small station near Bound Brook, on the Lehigh alley R. R. February 18 and 19 he spent in Boston and Providence cashing some of stolen express.

CIVIC WELFARE.

Taxation Without Representation Is Tyranny.

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY

Address of Oscar S. Straus at Banquet of Merchants of Boston on the Forming a Permanent Organization for Commercial and Civic Reform.

When your forefathers threw the British cargoes of tea into the Boston Harbor, they gave to the world an example of a new spirit in commerce—a spirit that placed patriotism above profit and public weal above personal gain. They gave concrete expression to that cardinal American principle, "Taxation without representation is tyranny."

The forms of tyranny change from age to age—from the militarism of Rome to the ecclesiastical tyranny that brought about the Reformation; then followed political tyranny, which produced our Revolution; then came economic tyranny—the oppression of the masses—which brought about the French Revolution.

I can not take a better text for the necessarily brief remarks that this occasion permits than the pregnant sentence from Governor Guild's recent Lincoln Day proclamation. He said, "Equal rights were won by the generations that have gone before us; equal opportunities are to be our gift to posterity." Yes, equal opportunities politically, economically, and individually, whether those equal opportunities are abridged by the autocratic power of government, of corporate power in the greedy hands of private individuals, or by lawless bands of labor agitators—it is but a different form of the same tyranny, alike inimical to the power of the State and the rights and privileges of the individual, be he employer or laborer, and to the extent that this power is permitted to exist it closes the highways of opportunity to the individual man, be he a graduate from Harvard or the son of a motorman on your street cars.

Now, my friends, I have not come here to talk politics, but to talk business; but the first requisite of good permanent business conditions is good morals—not one kind of morals for the farmer who drives his cart of produce to market and another kind of moral for the railroad which brings the products of the farms and factories from distant points. Equality of opportunity and rights is as necessary on the one highway as on the other. No unreasonable conditions or restraints must be placed upon either. There are combinations which promote trade and combinations which restrain trade; to check both is harmful, to permit both is more harmful. To adjust our laws to preserve corporate industrial and individual rights, and by all means individual rights, and to curb wrongs whether corporate or individual, is of the highest concern, not only to commerce, but to the stability of the commonwealth.

I understand that the purpose that you, who are the foremost merchants and business men of Boston, have in view is to form a more-effective working body, to the end of promoting the commercial and civic welfare of this ancient and honored municipality. As the executive head of that Department of our Government charged with the administration of affairs pertaining to commerce and labor, I have come here, not only to signify my deep interest in your purposes, but to lend whatever encouragement that may be in my power to this important movement for the protection of business and civic interests. I trust you will extend your sphere of usefulness beyond the limits of your city and your Commonwealth, and cooperate with the Department of Commerce and Labor, in order that the activities of that Department may be placed in closer touch with the commercial interests of the country. In December last a conference was held in the Department, at Washington, for the purpose of organizing a National Council of Commerce, in order to bring about a closer relationship between the Government Department having to do with commercial affairs and the various boards of trade, chamber of commerce, and trade organizations of the country. The rapid extension of British and German trade throughout the world is due in no small degree to the helpful cooperation of trade bodies with Government agencies. No country possesses more intelligent, educated, and progressive men of business than our own, and yet we have lacked a medium for that systematic cooperation which is so helpful, not only to our Executive Departments, but also to Congress, in formulating policies and legislation affecting our domestic and foreign commerce. I trust, therefore, that you will bring your organization into effective cooperation, and that the example you set will be followed in other commercial cities, and that you will not allow your activities to be curbed by the doctrine of State rights, wholesome as that is within its sphere. Commerce knows no such limitations; its interests are as broad as the country; they are world wide, and its rights, privileges, and obligations should be equally Federal and equally world wide.

Commerce and industry stand today on a higher plane than in any other age, and they are contributing more to the true grandeur of nations and to the true welfare of the masses than either the military spirit or the spirit of conquest. Commerce has placed more of the comforts of life within the reach of the masses than has been enjoyed by them in any past age. And I say this, not overlooking the fact that there is still much misery, and that the demand of labor for better wages and for more of the comforts of life is more urgent than ever before. But that is one of indications of progress, that the masses seek higher standards of life and living. The true welfare of a nation is not measured by the number of millionaires, but by the condition of the millions.

The development of our nation in four generations from three millions to ninety millions is the greatest marvel in all national history; but a small fraction of this growth is due to conquest—it is due to the planter, the pioneer, and to the industrial promoter. It is due equally as much to the twenty-five million workers and their descendants who came to us during the past one hundred years from foreign lands as to the descendants of the Pilgrim and Puritan fathers. It is due to the co-operative energy of labor and capital. To preserve that co-operation is the problem and duty of our day and generation, and the only way it can be preserved is on the basis of right and justice to both and from both. Bismarck said that, "The logic of history is as exact and exacting as Prussia's counting office." And what does that logic teach us? That the rights of the individuals must at all hazards be preserved, and not be trodden under foot, either by the tyranny of labor or by the tyranny of capital and to the extent that any government—municipal, state, or federal—either through impotence, weakness, or indifference, permits these wrongs to go unchecked and unpunished, it prepares the way for its own downfall. The ages of the conquest have passed, and left their wreckage of bloodshed, misery, and want in every clime. We are living in a commercial era—the happiest that has ever dawned upon free nations—an era that does not depend upon force of arms, but upon markets; an era which makes for peace and prosperity among nations. That nation is the best customer which is freest, because freedom works prosperity, industry, and wealth. So true is this that the measure of a nation's commerce is directly influenced by the measure of a nation's freedom. The successive supremacy in commerce of the Italian Republics, Holland, and Great Britain, as compared with the commercial backwardness of the despotic countries of Europe during the same periods, expresses almost in exact figures the measure of freedom in those respective lands.

In conclusion let me say I congratulate you upon the purposes of your organization—to promote the commercial and civic welfare. They are bound together by an indissoluble tie.

PACKY McFARLAND WINS.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 21.—Packy McFarland won the decision over Freddie Welch, of England, in a 10-round battle here tonight. It was the fastest and most scientific fighting ever seen here. Welch's defense and footwork was marvelous. McFarland won on aggressiveness.
