Force of Habit.

A Bosion psychologist was recently reminded of the story of the Russian jailer who, changing his occupation, found the chief interest of his leisure sented a strong plank exclusion of moments in catching birds, putting them in cages and selling them to the highest bidder.

The scientist, having to attend a series of lectures in a large public hall, struck up acquaintance with the janitor of the building and soon noted in him a suggestive bent of mind. The man seemed fond of counting the people and would occasionally report the exact number present. "We have 115 here tonight," he would say, or "Just 201 all told." or, when the hall was crowded, "I make it 370." There was a problem in all this, but it took some time for the psychologist to solve it. A bit of friendly, familiar talk, continually renewed, did the business, for it brought out the fact that the janitor had spent many of the previous years of his life as warden in an eastern prison. With rifle on shoulder from some inclosing wall the man had countingrained. In the recesses of his brain the lecture hall took the shape of a jail yard, and the audience were his prisoners. He counted because he wished to know if all were there .- Boston Herald.

An Astonishing Airship.

In these days of dirigible balloons, airships and aeroplanes the following account of an airship taken from the London Post for Dec. 22, 1709, is of interest:

"Father Bartholomew Laurent says that he has found out an invention by the help of which one may more speedily travel through the air than any other way, either by land or sea, so that one may go 200 miles in twentyfour hours."

The airship which was to accomplish this astonishing feat had at the top "sails wherewith the air is to be divided, which turn as they are directed." There was a rudder to direct the vessel's course, and the body was "formed at both ends scallopwise. In the cavity of each is a pair of bellows, which must be blown when there is no wind."

Two loadstones, some large amber beads and various other items all had some mysterious part to play in this attempt to traverse the air.
