

The Daily Market Report

PONTUAND, Sept. 30.—Despite the wrangle between the two states over salmon fishing in the Columbia River, which to date has resulted in an injunction by the Federal Court restraining the Oregon authorities from attempting to enforce Oregon law from the time, immense good has been the salmon fishing industry of the entire river as a result of Oregon's attempt to keep the upper stretch of the stream closed for a season.

Since August 25, the date when the new Oregon law placed a ban on fishing east of the Sandy, some fish have of course been caught in the upper river, for the most part by men who deliberately ignored the Oregon statute with a view to having the matter adjudicated by the courts, but the operations were desultory and the catch east of the Sandy to date has been but a fraction of what it would have been had the law not interferred.
