Senator Foraker does not claim to be the original Taft man, but now he is for Taft all the time.

Mr. Gompers is being read and awaiting the realization of the anti-trust character of some of his political bedfellows.

The Republican party found a jewel of a candidate, and naturally as many people as possible want to see that candidate.

It is the fondest Democratic hope that Bryan will interpret his third defeat in November as an ultimatum. Three rejections ought to convince him that "the people rule."

The unemployed man wants a job. He will not vote for Bryan, because that would be to vote against the quickening of activity in manufacture, trade and transportation.

This is a Republican campaign of reason, not rant; of argument, not agitation. Mr. Taft, the candidate, makes its effective advocate. The more the country sees of his personality the more assured is Republican victory.

Judge Taft not only wins votes by arousing public interest in his personality, but he adds strength to his party in every doubtful state by showing the hesitating a man they can trust.

Mr. Taft is willing to work for his party in any part of the country. Every Republican in every part of the country should emulate his example.

These are the school days for the youth of the republic. All the elders are conning their political text books also, but their study is in the nature of reviewing the chapter about Bryan upon which two examinations have been passed triumphantly.

Still Trying to Fool the Farmer.

Now, as in 1896 and again in 1900, the farmers are objects of Mr. Bryan's special solicitude. He assures them, greatly to their surprise, that they are oppressed and suffering, that their condition is going from bad to worse and that their only escape from the awful fate which threatens them lies in his election to the presidency. All this sort of talk is simply an empty echo of a speech delivered by Mr. Bryan in Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 26, 1890, in the course of which he said:

"You can talk to the farmer from now until election day, but you will never convince him that a gold standard has brought anything but ruin and distress to the farmer."

There is nothing in Mr. Bryan's campaign methods quite so amazing as his persistent insults to the intelligence of the American farmers. He appears to believe that they are too stupid to understand the simplest business conditions and that therefore they can be fooled by a tricky misrepresentation of facts. No other candidate for president ever dared to act upon the insolent assumption that the farmers are fools, and no other candidate was ever so crushingly censured by the vote of the great agricultural states as Bryan was in 1896 and 1900.

The "ruin and distress" which the gold standard has brought to the farmers are clearly disclosed in official statistics compiled by the United States bureau of labor. Comparing the figures for 1896, when the people definitely declared for the gold standard and against Bryanism, with those for 1907, it appears that the price of farm products has increased 75.10 per cent. In the same period the prices of food have increased only 40.57 per cent, the prices of cloth and clothing only 38.77 per cent, the prices of fuel and lighting only 29.43 per cent, the prices of metals and implements only 53.04 per cent, the prices of lumber and building materials only 57.28 per cent, the prices of house furnishing goods only 26.00 per cent and the prices of drugs and chemicals only 18.36 per cent.

These figures tell their own story, and a regiment of Bryans cannot refute it. They show that the farmers have profited more largely from the advance in the prices of staple commodities in the last twelve years than any other class of business men. A given quantity of his products for which the farmer received $100 in 1896 was worth $175.10 to him in 1907. His produce would purchase 24.56 per cent more food, 26.18 per cent more clothing, 14.41 per cent more implements, 47.94 per cent more chemicals and 38.80 per cent more house furnishings in 1907 than it would in 1896. The value of the less principal farm crops of the United States rose from $1,800,900,427 in 1895 to $2,143,512,988 in 1899 to $3,958,000,000 in 1907. In other words, the specific declaration of the people for the gold standard has been followed by a rising tide of prosperity in agricultural industry absolutely undreamed of in the old days of financial uncertainty, unstable credits and reckless agitation for cheap money.

Mr. Bryan is entirely familiar with these facts, but he lacks the courage to acknowledge them. He knows that since the people condemned his attempt to betray the national credit and debase the national currency the farmers have prospered as never before, and if the teachings of experience were of the slightest value to him he would know, too, that his effort this year to brand them as winning mendicants will be rebuked as indignantly as were his similar efforts in 1896 and 1900.

Maine Loyal to Republican Principles

Nobody has argued that the wave of prohibition which has swept over the south within the past few years portended any great political change in the states below Mason and Dixon's line. It would be just as absurd to assume that because the opponents of prohibition showed unexpected strength in Maine, the result of the struggle indicated declining loyalty to Republican principles and the Republican cause in the national contest. Everybody knows how bitterly local contests on the prohibition issue are fought to a finish; how earnestly the contestants concentrate their energies on the one point in the election in which they are interested and have thought and vision for naught else. Imagine telling a Texan Democrat that because he voted against his party on the liquor question he could be counted on to vote against it in a national campaign!

Quite as ridiculous would be the inference that a Maine farmer voting for local option on Sept. 14 would vote for Bryan, compulsory bank robbery and government purchase of railroads for five or six thousand millions of dollars and other Bryan brain storms on Nov. 3. That the Republican ship of state weathered the anti-prohibition tempest in Maine and reached port with a substantial majority is most gratifying evidence that in the presidential election the adage of a generation ago will again be gloriously verified—"As goes Maine, so goes the Union!"
