OCEAN, BAR, BAY, DOCK AND RIVER

One of the very finest sailing ships to enter this port in a long while is the Ville du Havre, which arrived in on Wednesday evening and left up yesterday for the metropolis on the hawsers of the Harcest Queen. She came from London, via Hobart Town, "the longest way 'round," as is customary with all French ships that get a bounty on their mileage from the home government. She did not measure up to American standards as observed at the United States Customs, and consequently paid a charge of $24, in this behalf.

The big American-Hawaiian liner Nevada came down the river from Portland at 11 o'clock and docked at the A. & C. piers, where she took on 3000 cases of salmon for Eastern delivery, and will tranship it at the Isthmus of Nicaragua. She went to sea about 4 o'clock and will touch at San Diego en route. Captain Johnston, of the McCabe Stevedoring Company, loaded the ship.

The steamer Homer is due down from the metropolis this morning on her way to Bay City.

EXPECTED HOME FROM FAIRBANKS SOON

ENGINEER JORDAN WRITES OF
PECULIARITIES OF STEAM-
BOATING IN FAR NORTH

Chesfer Jordan, the well known young engineer of this city, who has been working at his craft in Fairbanks, Alaska, for the last year and a half, writes to his home people that he hopes to be with them soon and will probably be down on the next steamer from the north, if all goes well with him.

But his letter indicates that he is in considerable of a quandary on the score of whether he will get "out" or not, as, when he wrote he was on his steamer, the "Kiakuk" (which only draws 19 inches), at a point 100 miles up the Chandler river from the Yukon and a long ways from his home port of Fairbanks. His steamer was then stalled on the shallow stream 30 miles from her destination, with the waters falling rapidly and a freeze impending, and if the rains did not fall and release them the steamer would have to be tied up there for the winter and the officers and crew return down to the Yukon and to Fairbanks in the small boats.

He stated further that there were only boats enough to carry the captain, officers and engineers and that the crew would have to work their way back to civilization on a raft constructed for that purpose; and altogether it looked a bit dubious whether they would reach Fairbanks in time to get out before that frigid country shuts itself up in the barriers of snow and ice. But he will get out if anyone does, and his kinsmen and friends are waiting with sanguine hope of seeing him soon.

A VERY INTERESTING STATEMENT

WITH REGARD TO ASTORIA'S
NEW ELECTRIC RAILWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. Joseph M. Anderson, treasurer of the Oregon Coast Railway Company and the well known and popular treasurer of the Scandinavian-American Savings Bank in talking of the possibilities of the proposed electric line from here to Seaside, said in a general way that he was very confident the present plans would develop in the early building of the road.

"I do not believe there is any one kind of investment," said Mr. Anderson, "that will develop a given community more rapidly or more thoroughly than electric railways, broadly speaking. It is one of the essential agencies of any modern community. No rural or suburban district can be developed to the extent of its fullest possibilities without electric lines and they all pay. Usually they enjoy a great deal more business than they plan to have in the beginning.

"I know of some business men of large financial abilities who formerly would have anything to do with electric railways but are now convinced that they are among the best modern investments and for that reason they are giving them nearly all their attention.

"I feel confident that the road from here to Seaside being constructed will be a good paying investment from an early date. I agree with Mr. E. Z. Ferguson that the plans we have under consideration in case we secure all of the right-of-way will result in ultimate success.

"To cite a specific instance showing what electric railways can do I wish to call your attention to the fact that electric lines that center in the Twin Cities have brought fully a 100,000 people from the suburban districts to attend the state fair there in a single day.

"Electric roads do not interfere with steam roads in any way. The owners of steam roads have long since acknowledged that electric lines develop local business which in turn gives them the long distance haul. The local electric lines bring in a greater population which creates a certain amount of produce that must be hauled to the larger markets farther East. Clothing and family necessities must be hauled by the steam roads from the East to this added population, creating distinctively new business.

"I feel confident that we may expect every owner of real estate along the line of this proposed electric road to give Mr. H. G. Van Dusen the rights of way almost as rapidly as they can fix up the documents. I trust that he will be able to achieve the success of securing all of the right of way within the next few days. Mr. Van Dusen is closely identified with the larger real estate interests of this city and for that reason he should meet with the most hearty support in this important work."
