COUNTY ASSESSOR IS GIVEN THE RIGHT

GRANTED AUTHORITY TO APPOINT HIS OWN DEPUTY

The senate finally passed the bill permitting the assessor of Clatsop county to appoint his own deputy without the intervention of the county court. The announcement yesterday morning stating that the senate had refused to concur with the house in passing this bill over the governor's veto proved erroneous. The telegraph reports were not clear. It seems that the senate did actually kill the bill, as was reported in the papers, but afterwards reconsidered its action and passed it.

Why Governor Chamberlain vetoed this bill, which was introduced by Representative Leinenweber, is not at all clear. In every way its provisions seem to be all right, and its only purpose was to permit the county assessor of this county to appoint his own deputy, instead, as heretofore, of having the county court make the appointment. The bill did not provide for any increase in salary and contained nothing new except the one matter of placing the appointment in the hands of the man who naturally ought to have it. "I think the bill got into bad company," said one man yesterday, "and for that reason may have been killed." He evidently meant that the governor looked upon it as one of the "more" bills, introduced to increase the salaries of some officials during their terms of office. The bills to increase the salary of the county superintendent of schools was also passed over the governor's veto, as announced yesterday morning.

"THE BRAHMA DIAMOND"

Jewel Theatre Has a Film Causing Patrons to "Sit up and Take Notice."

The program now at the pretty Jewel theatre is one of unusual excellence, the feature film being the latest success in the motion picture world, entitled "The Brahma Diamond." The machine starts with a scene in Arabia, showing the interior of one of the temples or places of worship with the many subjects of this strange creed praying to and worshipping an idol in the shape of a statue the image of a man. Upon the forehead of this idol sparkles a large and costly diamond which greatly attracts an American tourist who is in this eastern land on a pleasure trip. The American who is a scoundrel at heart immediately plots to gain possession of this costly jewel and to this end succeeds in persuading one of the Arabs into the conspiracy. The idol with the diamond however in guarded night and day by one of the Sheikh's trusted men and for a while the American is foiled in his efforts to secure the stone. After considerable disappointment however he learns that the night guard in this temple is the sweetheart of a young Arab girl who on this particular evening is with her father alone. The American and his comrade creep into the house, bind the young girl's father, and tell the young lady that unless she helped them get the diamond her father would be murdered. They give the young girl a receptacle containing a poison and command her to proceed to the scene of the coming crime. The two scoundrels crouch in the shadow of the pillars of the temple, but in view of the girl, and bid her to approach her sweetheart and give him the poison. This she does after being threatened that if she refused her father would be murdered on the scene. She gives the young guard the poison and he immediately collapses. The American springs upon the idol and secures the diamond after which he and his companion bind and gag the girl, her father and the guard, and make their escape. Later the victims are found by other subjects of the Sheikh and are, of course, accused of the theft. They are thrown into the dungeon, both maintaining their guilt to protect the other. Finally the Sheikh allows the young man to go, but with the understanding that his sweetheart is to be executed unless he returned with the diamond in three days' time. He first goes to a mysterious medicine man and learns of the whereabouts of the American whom he has already learned by the Hindu strange power as the man he is after. After considerable difficulty he locates his prey and incidentally the stone which the American has concealed in the handle of his traveling bag. He secures the stone and arrives at his native land just at the opportune moment, the guards already in the act of beheading his beloved. He gives up the precious jewel, they are both released and everything ends happily. The film is an exceedingly lengthy one and is without a doubt one of the most strangely fascinating ever exhibited in this city. The balance of the program is up to the standard, and a visit to the Jewel theatre this afternoon or evening will delight the most critical of individuals.

A special attraction at this theatre is announced for tomorrow matinee and evening by Manager Newman, he having secured the services of the Columbia orchestra and they will render a choice program at both the afternoon and evening performance.
