AMUSEMENTS

Lillian Russell has been placed among the "noted sons and daughters of Iowa." The actress-prima donna was born at Clinton in that state and was christened Helen Louise Leonard. It was the late Tony Pastor who selected the euphonious and pretty stage name of Lillian Russell, then a tender slip of a girl, but who was destined to become the greatest stage favorite of her time in American light opera, and who is now taking first rank amongst American comedienne.

The new State Capitol Building at Des Moines, Iowa, which is nearing completion, will have a Hall of Fame, and the Commissioners recently requested Miss Russell to send them her favorite photograph for a place in the honored collection. The diva did better, for she has generously taken from her private collection her favorite portrait. It is the painting by the distinguished Carolus Duran, which was done in Paris in 1900. The painting is valued in excess of $5,000, but will be Miss Russell's contribution to her native state.

During her long engagement in New York City in her present comedy, "Wildfire," Miss Russell permitted the painting to be displayed in the lobby of the Liberty Theater, where it attracted the attention of art critics and even elicited the favorable express of the dilettanti. Mr. Duran has caught the salient charm of the Russell personality in the presentment of the artist. His portrait reproduces the glorious tints of the Russell complexion, but what is more, counterfeits her beautiful expression, which is the well-spring of the marvelous charm this woman possesses.

THE JEWEL SCINTILLATES.

The Jewel Theatre has been beautifully adorned by Manager Newman and in such fashion as to create pleasure with his big clientele. The walls have been marbled and the interior overhauled to the point of ideal comfort and enjoyment, and the lobby has been set with plateglass mirrors until it looks like a snowy maze to the visitor. The attractions have been increased by the engagement of the famous Hawaiian Royal Orchestra and Glee Club so popular in Portland for the past three years, and last night when the cozy little amusement house threw open its doors after a week of retirement, it was almost impossible to handle the throngs that invaded it. It was filled and emptied time and again, and the certainty of the success of the new attraction is fixed beyond all cavil. Mr. Newman has catered freely and very successfully to this public and is entitled to the largest possible recognition and patronage, and from the look of things last night, is going to get all that is due in that line. He deserves it.

The great jungle scene in "Classmates" has received more notice than any other scene in any other play on the road this season. Norman Hackett plays the leading part in the play which is booked at the Astoria Theatre for April 24th.

LUXURIES NOT NEEDED

CHICAGO, April 10.—Dry Martin cocktails, Turkish cigarettes, and benedictine do not appeal to a large part of the traveling public when they are served with meals on dining cars. As a result the table d'hote which has raged for some time among the railroads between Chicago and the Twin Cities and between Chicago and Kansas City, has come to an end.

The war started as a measure of competition to attract trade, but according to the general passenger agents it was a dismal failure. Temperance advocates complained that the railroads were tempting people to drink.

"A young American actor in a young American play," is Jules Murray's announcement this season. The actor's name is Norman Hackett. The play is "Classmates." Both will be seen at the Astoria Theatre on Sunday, April 24th.
