New York, July 22.—There were 2278 immigrants loaded at Castle Garden yesterday from five steamers. Among the Wagoner's passengers were a large party of Mormon recruits bound for Salt Lake City. They were about 100 in number, and consisted mainly of Swede and Norwegians, with some English and Scotch. The party differs from previous companies of Mormon immigrants in the usually large number of women and children. They are under the charge of two or three missionaries or agents of the Mormon church, who have accompanied the party from Europe and will go with them to their destination. The Hudson river tunnel excavation stopped last night by accident was resumed this morning. It is hoped to reach the bodies this afternoon.

CLEVELAND, July 22.—The Ohio Democratic Convention assembled this forenoon at the Euclid avenue Opera House with a full attendance. The convention opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Bolles, of the Episcopal Church. Judge L. D. Thoman was chosen temporary chairman. After his speech and the appointment of the customary committee the convention took a recess until after noon. The Convention assembled this afternoon. The order of business was permanent chairman. The Committee on Credentials reported six of the thirty-five delegates present. No contest.

The Columbia's Arrival. Fully 2,000 persons congregated on the steamship dock about 7 o'clock last evening waiting to see the magnificent new steamship Columbia. Favorable predictions were jumped with a deliberate purpose to hold a session till the exhibition has its novelty. The loud report of a gun fired from the Oregon, which was nicely captioned, sixaled the younger sister's presence, and put the excitement on the tip of expectancy. Majorically the noble ship stepped to the dock, her proud commander, Capt. Belsh showing his familiar face, will pleased with the interest his ward created, and happy at having safely landed his valuable trust. But a favored few, including members of the press, were allowed on board. The is elegantly furnished and upholstered, the woodwork being artfully beautiful. She resembles the Oregon very much though larger and more expensive. Her model is better, the hull being sharper her water line the perfection of beauty and her woodwork finer. She is a forty per cent. more powerful than the Oregon, and is fitted with a large diameter and bilge pumps. Noted in her construction and fitting up are a handsome wide dome extending over the passenger's staterooms. Queen Anne windows, suits of iron of three; ladies' louders, equivalent to the smoking room; staterooms in suits of three, with beds fitted up like those in Pullman's sleeping cars; handsome bouquets of artificial flowers in elegant vases on the table of the saloons; and the electric light. The last is wonderful in its simple workings. She has 65 staterooms, with accommodations for 200 cabin passengers and 300 steerage passengers. It will be nearly three weeks before the Columbia has discharged cargo and is ready to sail for San Francisco.—See July 22nd.

WHO MURDERED MORGAN? Tharlow Weed Tells All About It. [Correspondence St. Paul Pioneer Press.] "I know how Morgan was killed," said Mr. Weed, "and where and when he was killed, and who killed him. It was a dreadful murder." "How do you know?" he asked, repeating my question. "I know because the criminals themselves confessed it to me before they died." "Is it possible?" I said. "Will you tell me about it?" "Yes, I have told it partially before. It was in 1854, about five years after the sudden disappearance of Morgan, that on my trip for labeling the Manuscripts, two men volunteered to be my witnesses. One of them was John Whitney." "I think Mr. Weed, said the other, was the man who had charge of the old fort where Morgan was confined by his captors. He went on: "I invited them to eat some oysters with me after the trial, and while we were at the table John Whitney confessed, in reply to our urgency, to make a clean breast of it about the murder of Morgan. He declared that the terrible secret had been a burden on him day and night, and then he told who the men were who hid the lodge one dark night to put Morgan out of the way, let he might reveal the secret of the order. He said he was one of the men. The others were Col. Wm. K. Garside, Howard and Chubbuck. They went to the fort, bound the prisoner hand and foot, laid him in a boat, carried him to the middle part of the Niagara river, where it was about two miles to either shore, and there, tying weights to his head and heels, they flung him overboard. When he had told the story, Whitney said he felt relieved. The other witness turned to him and said "John, Weed can hang you now." "Yes," said Whitney, "but he won't." I thought much about my duty to the public, but it was obviously impossible to evade his unless he would say solemnly in court what he said to me.

"It was nearly 30 years afterward when I met John Whitney in Chicago, when I was there in convention in 1860. He came to me and said he wanted to make a careful confession for me to write down, to be published after his death. There was nobody else to dread to trust it to, he said. I agreed to commit his dreadful secret to paper as soon as the convention adjourned. The hour it adjourned he was waiting for me at my hotel. I was in the city of disappearance and was busy with a hundred things, and I told Whitney that I should come back to Chicago shortly and would then attend to it. We exchanged addresses after that, but he died suddenly and I never saw him again."

"The Chicago papers," I said, "ought to look up his relatives or friends there, and see if he left any documents or told his secret." "Yes," he replied, "it would be well. It is strange, by the way, that every one of these five murderers are dead, and all but one died violent deaths. Colonel King committed suicide and Garside was killed to death by a horse."
