

Repentance.

A man who as an overseer before the war had driven the darkeys with a whoop...

"You old villain," exclaimed the overseer, hooking a hand in the old man's collar...

"Marster, for de Lord, I hopes you 'skuse me."

"Ah, yes, you old rattle-snake; you thought that I would be afraid to tackle you, eh?"

"Marster, fore de Lord, you must 'skuse me fur de ole man hain't seed a wink since long afore freedom."

"Yes, sah; blinder den ole Jacob at de time ob his death."

"Give me your hand, ole man. Here, take this tobacco."

"Much obliged, thankee, sah."

"Here, take this pipe. Here's a red handkerchief. Any man that would choke a blind man ought to be stripped."

"No, sah; not a one."

"If there is, I'll beat him till he feels like a pig with the thumps; you've seen pigs with the thumps, haven't you?"

"Yes, sah."

"Well, I'll whale him till he has the thumps. Do you know of anybody that can whip me?"

"Why, marster?"

"Because, any man that would choke a blind darkey ought to be whipped. Hold on, don't go—there's some more tobacco. Put this pint bottle in your pocket. I thought at first that I'd make my will in your favor, but to save lawyer's fees, I'll give up everything now."

"Do just as I say, old man. Step back and let drive."

The old man stepped back, bowed his neck, and with a bound struck the overseer so hard that he staggered out into the street and fell.

"That's all right, sir," he said to himself, getting up and walking away. "He served you right. The next time you collar a blind nigger I'll use my influence to have you killed."

TREATMENT OF BREEDING SWINE.—Were I raising my pigs for pork instead of for breeders, I would feed them somewhat differently from what I now do...
