

THE RICH DO GROW RICHER.

Near the close of 1885 there died in New York a citizen of that place, who left his children a fortune estimated at $182,000,000, besides making a number of minor bequests. It will help us to form an idea of the magnitude of this sum to consider that it would suffice to give a Christmas present of $10 to every inhabitant of the city, or at the rate of $100 to every family of five persons, supposing the population at that time to have been 1,300,000. A political committee of 100, appointed in the same city in October last, comprised eight members whose estimated wealth reached an aggregate of somewhat more than $300,000,000, and at least two of the most colossal fortunes were unrepresented in this number. Estates rising into the tens of millions are to be found in various other cities, and taking the country through, one might designate twenty-five persons whose united wealth, according to current estimates, is not less than two-thirds of a billion dollars, or about one per cent. of the total wealth of the United States, supposing this to have increased over 50 per cent. since the census of 1880. Were all the property in equally large amounts, the whole would barely suffice for 2,500 proprietors; or, supposing these families averaging four persons each besides themselves, it would supply a population a trifle larger than that of the little town of Yonkers, as stated in the last census.

There are no authentic statistics showing the distribution of property among different portions of our people, but whatever the facts may be as to the comparative distribution of such wealth as is held by the upper strata of the circle of the extremely rich, it will hardly be disputed that the latter now hold a much larger portion of the total wealth of the country than was held by a like percentage of the people twenty-five or thirty years ago. For the proofs that this is the case lie upon the surface, and trust themselves upon general observation. Moreover, I see no reason to believe that the tendency to increasing accumulation at the upper end of the possessory scale has reached or is approaching its limit. A great fortune, with ordinary careful management, possesses an enormous power of generation. Even when invested in good securities, at a very moderate rate of interest, a fortune that rises into the millions affords ample means of making yearly additions to the principal. If invested in real estate in any of our growing cities, it yields increasing income from decade to decade, as the land advances in value, putting it in the power of the owner to lay aside an increasing surplus; while in the hands of a shrewd speculator not overscrupulous in his dealings, its power of increase may be still greater. In January, 1887, the New York Commercial Advertiser reported the number of 1,113 houses during the preceding year to be ten or twelve of the great fortunes invested with Wall street" in $80,000,000.

A Maker of Gods.

"Boston Herald."

A queer story is told of a man named John Concord, who left Sanford, Me., many years ago and was stranded on one of the Sandwich Islands. Not knowing what to do for a living there, he set up in business as the maker of gods for the ignorant natives, making his images from iron with tools picked up from the vessels wrecked on the coast. These images being indestructible gained the favor of the islanders, and Concord afterwards married a native belle. One day in the streets of Honolulu Concord met a man who had been picked up from the wreck of a vessel a short time before, who claimed to have half of Maine, and on investigation Concord discovered that the stranger's home was in Sanford, and that he was his (Concord's) old schoolmaster. Thompson brought Concord's four children to this country to be educated. All four afterward returned to Honolulu, while Concord, after the death of his wife, returned to Maine and married again. One of his sons by the last marriage is now a leading druggist in Lewiston, Me.

In the quaint Pennsylvania community of Economy, every inhabitant is compelled to rigidly conform to somewhat exacting rules. Every one is required to attend church twice every Sunday and twice a month from Pentecost. Any one found out of bed after 9 o'clock is immediately banished from the town, and all are required to attend school and learn how to express it. When we see men in this enlightened age sitting astride the fence and watching the great contest between right and wrong and neither using pen, tongue nor purse to aid either side, we agree with a noted writer and say: "God wasted mud when he made such beings." We hold that a man who is too easily led to express his opinion on questions and take sides on issues that affect the public welfare deserves the prize so dearly purchased by his ancestors, and throws away his share as a stockholder in a Republican form of government, and of his own free will, crouches like a cringing Spaniel at the foot of some imaginary monarch,—Greenville, Texas Herald.

NEUTRALITY.

In days gone by humanity was muzzled. The most gifted writers and the grandest authors of the world had to shape their utterances so they would not displease some tyrannical king or queen. Acts and deeds that cried to heaven for vengeance were thus left in the dark and perpetrators of them still waved the royal scepter over enslaved humanity. Only a few hundred years the light of education and advancement has shone so brightly on mankind, but to-day we have free speech and press in nearly every civilized country. Here, in our land, we are enjoying those blessed privileges that a few hundred years ago none but the monarch could enjoy. In view of these historical facts it seems strange that there are men in this country who either never knew the luxury of an opinion or never had moral courage enough to express it. When we see men in this enlightened age sitting astride the fence and watching the great contest between right and wrong and neither using pen, tongue nor purse to aid either side, we agree with a noted writer and say: "God wasted mud when he made such beings."

He Won the Hat.

A wearer of a silk hat once cast many lives. It was in 1811, when Captain Decatur, of the United States Navy, commanding the frigate United States, met Captain Carden of the British Navy, commanding the Macedonian. It was just prior to the War of 1812, and while talking about the chances Carden said to Decatur:

"If you and I ever meet our ho-dies are declared, I'll bet your silk hat that the Macedonian will capture the United States."

"I'll bet you a silk hat that you don't," was the reply.

The two frigates met October 25, 1812, and after a bloody fight the English flag was lowered.

Decatur hastened on board the prize, and Carden tendered him his sword.

"Desert your sword, Carden," said Decatur. "Let your silk hat, and as we're a long way from a haberdashery, I'll take the one you wear." The hat was given.

Carden: No happiness without a home. But Decatur's Anger Never brings health and happiness to the despot. As you think me, then give me a bottle. Twenty-five cents.

in Brief, And To The Point.

These points are discussed. Disraeli's book is missing. Indemnity fails to cover losses.

The human digestive apparatus becomes the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is really put out of order.

Great for a tough food, sleepy look, bad memory, neuralgic pains, late hours, irregular habits, and other things which will aid you in your work.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED

To the Editor—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy to any of your readers who may have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,
