Give Them A Chance.

That is to say, your lungs! Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them. When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

Consumption Surely Cured
To the Editor—Please inform our readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

Weekly Budget of News as Furnished by our Regular Correspondent.

Washington, May 14, 1888.

The sensation at the Capital this week was the war of epithets, accusations and denunciations, between Senators Ingalls of Kansas and Voorhees of Indiana. It was on Tuesday, and two hours before the time for the Senate to meet visitors began to fill the galleries, it having been announced by the Senator from Kansas (the President pro tem of the Senate) that he would on that day leave the chair to answer a speech made by the Indiana Senator last week. By noon, the opening hour for the Senate, all available space on the floor of the Chamber and in the galleries was taken, the doorways were jammed with people and out in the corridors there was a curious mass of humanity sufficient to have filled the galleries over again, but of no hope of getting even near one of the doorways that commanded a view of the Interior. Congressmen left the all important tariff debate in the House of Representatives and came over to hear the wrothy speeches, for everybody expected to see Senator Ingalls pour vitriol upon and apply scourges upon the Democratic Senators who had taken exception to his recent speech on the Dependent Pension bill. In that speech Mr. Ingalls alluded to Gens. Hancock and McClellan as allies of the Confederacy, and for this he was vehemently attacked by Senator Voorhees last week. His reply was to Mr. Voorhees' attack. Lack of space forbids me to give even an epitomized form of the remarks of either of the Senators, but the scene in the Senate was one which, perhaps, has never been paralleled in the history of that august body. Language became personal in the extreme, and while it was not Billingsgate, it was far from beyond Billingsgate's best record, and although no blows were struck, everybody held his breath for awhile and thought there would be. In the course of his remarks Mr. Ingalls took occasion to say that Justice Lamar was no lawyer, never had been, and that he was appointed by a reluctant President only because he was the nearest friend of Jefferson Davis. He made quite a number of statements concerning Senator Voorhees' political record for the past twenty-five years, some of which the latter branded as campaign lies, saying he did not design to reply to such accusations. He would simply spit upon them and trample upon them. Several times Mr. Voorhees called Mr. Ingalls a liar, and a great liar, and one time a dirty dog. Representative Johnson of the State of Indiana who was seated at a desk in rear of Mr. Ingalls was alluded to in several instances as having ventured for the truth of some statement made in regard to Mr. Voorhees' past course of conduct. "He is a liar if he intimates such a thing," roared the Senator, "it never occurred, never in the world, pass my word to the scoundrel behind you, and tell him he is an infamous scoundrel and a liar. Tell him I say so." At one time Senator Ingalls said passionately, "If this were a police court, that citizen there, from Indiana, would be arrested and put in the dock for being drunk and disorderly."

People Demand Protection—Patent Medicines.

What are they? As a general thing they are prescriptions having been used with great success by old and well-read Physicians. Thousands of invalids have been unexpectedly cured by their use, and they are the wonder and dread of Physicians and Medical Colleges in the U. S., so much so, that Physicians graduating at Medical Colleges are required to discountenance Proprietary Medicines, as through them the country doctor loses his most profitable practice. As a manufacturer of Proprietary Medicines, Dr. G. G. Green, of Woodbury, N. J., advocates most cordially—in order to prevent the risk that the sick and afflicted are liable to, almost daily by the use of Patent Medicines put out by inexperienced persons for aggrandizement only, and the employing of inexperienced doctors by which almost every village and town is cursed; and men claiming to be doctors who had better be undertakers, experimenting with their patients and robbing them of their money and health,—for the good of the afflicted that our government protect its People by making laws to regulate the practice of medicine by better experienced and more thoroughly educated Physicians, and thereby keep up the honor and credit of the profession, also form laws for the recording of recipes of Proprietary Medicines, under examination and decision of experienced Chemists and Physicians appointed for that purpose by the Government, before they are licensed for general use. He would most freely place the recipe of Boschee's German Syrup and Green's August Flower under such laws, had he the proper protection, and thereby save the prejudice of the people, and avoid the competition and imitation of worthless medicines.—Copied from the Chicago Mail, Aug. 3, 1887.

The New Boy.

A policeman who was passing through an alley saw half a dozen boys on a fence looking into a back yard, and when he asked what they were doing, one of them replied: "Waiting for a boy." "What boy?" "Belongs to a family just moved in." "What's the matter with him?" "Oh, nothing! We're just going to see about something." The officer passed around to the front, and from this station he saw the "new boy" come out and the biggest boy on the fence drop down. The two went at it hot and heavy, but presently the new boy came out on top, and all the others dropped down into the yard and offered him a bite of their apples and declared him a good fellow. He had been tased and found sandy.—Detroit Free Press.

To bashful correspondent—The first thing for you to do is to pop the question; the second to question the pop.—Burlington Free Press.

They Believed in Free-Love.

Some years ago, when the free-love notions were running around loose in New England, a Boston man and woman who had imbibed of these doctrines until they affected to dispise all the common conventionalities of life, came to the conclusion that they would live together without going through the ridiculous and unnecessary ceremony of marriage. They both moved in good society, and made no secret of their intention; in fact they announced it to every one they met. Staid old Boston's aristocracy was shaken to the depths at such an unheard-of proceeding—apparently determined upon the best of faith. Relatives, friends, and even chance acquaintances, tried all manner of reasoning and persuasion upon the wayward couple, but to no avail. The man and woman quietly pursued the even tenor of their way, not being in the least alarmed when legal proceedings were threatened by the woman's parents. So a plan was patched up by some intimate friends of the couple by which it was hoped to circumvent them in their intention. The man was prevailed upon to give a dinner party, to which were invited prominent society people, including the Governor of the State. When dessert was put upon the table the talk became general, and soon turned upon the perverse couple. The man and woman answered every question put to them with the most perfect equanimity. Finally the Governor took a hand in the conversation. After asking a few questions and commenting on the answers thereto, in a calm, judicial manner, he turned to the man and asked: "Do you Mr. —, intend to love and cherish this woman as your wife, for good or evil, for better or worse?" "Yes, sir," answered the man, calmly.

"And I do you, madam, intend to obey this man as your husband, for better or worse, for good or evil?" "I do, sir," answered the woman, politely.

"Then, by the power vested in me as Governor of this commonwealth, I declare you to be man and wife."

And thus the plans of the couple were frustrated, for which they afterwards declared they were heartily thankful. They are now old and respectable residents of Chicago.

Comment upon the nomination of Mr. Fuller of Illinois, for Chief Justice of the United States, has been favorable to the selection from every standpoint.

had intended. Senators Eutiss and Gibson of Louisiana, then replied with some spirit to Mr. Ingalls' criticism of Louisiana election methods, and fortunately the Senate adjourned without the belligerent Senators getting the floor again. It was a long time, however, before that end of the Capitol was cleared. People hung around the corridors looking for a continuation out of doors of the hostilities so fiercely waged within.

The verdict of the sober-minded people on the Tuesday's debate is that there was nothing to admire in it; that its chief characteristics were its shocking lack of dignity and its entire want of appositeness to any living question of the day; and that such a spectacular exhibition might be pardonable on the stump, it should never have taken place on the floor of the United States Senate. Satire and indignation were the fire-arms used, and in regard to which Senator displayed the greatest degree of skill in their management it depended altogether upon the sympathies of the audience one way or the other.

The Senate has been discussing the Chinese Treaty behind closed doors.

The tariff debate proceeds in the House with only an occasional little tilt between the speakers to break the monotony. Comment upon the nomination of Mr. Fuller of Illinois, for Chief Justice of the United States, has been favorable to the selection from every standpoint.
