Give Them A Chance.

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them. When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

That Highway of Nations, the broad Atlantic, is ever a sorry thoroughfare. Yet blow the winds ever so fiercely, and ride the waves ever so loftily, seamen must man the good ships, tourists will brave the sea-sage, and commercial travelers and movers must visit the centers of foreign trade and manufacture. That atrocious mauling, seariness, together with giddy pains and much inward uneasiness is often endured when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters would have fortified the voyagers against them. Sea captains, and in fact all old sailors and veteran travelers, are acquainted with the protective value of this reliable preventive and remedy, and are rarely unprovided with it. Longmate to the far West should use it as a safeguard against malaria. Seek the aid of the Bitters for dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, kidney troubles, and all ailments that impair the harmonious and vigorous action of the vital powers.

THE STARS AND STRIPES.

So much has been written concerning the origin of the American flag, our cherished banner of the "Stars and Stripes," permit me to furnish the following data, which are authentic and historically true, as the history of the United States flag:

The idea of standards originated with the Egyptians at an early age. The Crusaders added the cross to their banners. The union of the three crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick marks, first, the union of England and Scotland into the kingdom of Great Britain, and then this kingdom with Ireland. This is termed the great union flag of Great Britain, and was brought by the colonists to America.

When the thirteen colonies began to feel the iron pressure of British tyranny and domestic rule, they placed under their banners a rattlesnake, cut in thirteen pieces, representing the thirteen original colonies, with the motto, "join or die." When these colonies became more united in their purposes of resistance to British enslavement, they placed on their flag a well-formed rattlesnake, in the attitude of about to strike, with the motto, "don't tread on me."

Dr. Franklin, seeing this emblem on one of the drums of that day, writes as follows: "On inquiry, and from study, I learned that the ancients considered the serpent an emblem of wisdom, and in some attitudes, of endless duration. Also that countries are often represented by animals peculiar to that country. The rattlesnake is found nowhere but in America. Her eye is exceedingly bright and without eyelids—emblem of vigilance. She never begins an attack and she never surrenders—emblem of magnanimity and courage. She never wounds even her enemies, until after generously giving them warning not to tread on her—which is emblematic of the spirit of the people who inhabit her country. She appears apparently weak and defensive, but her weapons are nevertheless formidable. Her poison is the necessary means for the digestion of her food, but certain destruction to her enemies, showing the power of American resources. Her thirteen rattles, the only part which increases in number, are distinct from each other, and yet so united that they cannot be disconnected without breaking them to pieces, showing the impossibility of an American republic without the union of States." How marvelously prophetic.

A single rattle will give no sound alone, but the ringing of the thirteen together is sufficient to startle the boldest man alive. She is beautiful in youth, which increaseth with her age, her tongue is forked, as the lightning, and her abode is among the impenetrable rocks."

The next form of the United States was the stars and stripes. Its proportions are perfect when properly made, the first and last stripes being red, with alternate stripes of white. The blue field for the stars is the square of the width of seven stripes. On the 14th of June, 1777, the Continental congress resolved, "That the flag of the United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, and that the Union be thirteen white stars on a blue field, representing a new constellation." Previous to this, however, our national banner was the union flag, combining the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew.

The stars and stripes were unfurled for the first time at the battle of Saratogo on the occasion of the surrender of General Burgoyne.

The stars of the flag represent an idea taken from the constellation Lyra, which signifies harmony. The blue of the field was taken from the banner of the Covenanters of Scotland, likewise significant of the league and covenant of United Colonies against oppression, and incidentally involving vigilance, perseverance and justice. The stars were disposed in a circle, symbolizing the perpetuity of the Union, the circle being the sign of eternity. Both the thirteen stripes and the stars showed the number of United Colonies, and denoted the subordination of the states to, and their dependence upon the Union, as well as equality among themselves. The whole was a blending of the previous banners, namely the red flag of the army and the white flag of the navy. The red color, which in the days of Roman glory was the signal of defiance, denoted daring and the white purity.

On the 13th of January, 1794, by an act of Congress, the flag was altered to fifteen red and white stripes and fifteen stars. On the 14th of April, 1818, congress again altered the flag by returning to the original thirteen stripes and fifteen stars, as the adding of a new stripe for each additional state would make the flag too unwieldy. The new star is added to the flag on the 4th of July following the admission of each state into the Union.—Ex.

Don't Forget the Widow.

A Dakota retail dry goods man had died, and at the funeral service in the church a good deacon arose and remarked:

"If there are any friends of the deceased who have anything to say we shall take a mournful pleasure in listening to them."

No one responded for two or three minutes and then the widow got up.

"I haven't much to say on this sad occasion," she said, "but I would like to announce that business will be carried on at the old stand by the heartbroken widow of the deceased and our spring stock of goods can't be excelled in price and quality in this neck of the woods, and I hope you'll not forget the widow or the fatherless. Amen."—Washington Critic.

Vineyardists and orcharlists in California are already fearing that it will be impossible to gather this year's fruit crop. Agents are in Chinatown securing Chinese to work on contracts. A plan to import negroes is meeting with favor.

"What a labor-saving invention the type writer is! Don't you find it a great convenience?"

"Convenience? Drat 'em! They marry off faster than I can fill their places."

"Water is a medicine," read a toper in a sanitary journal. "Next some fool will be advocating water as a beverage," he added, with a look of disgust.

Wife—Women are often criticised for wearing loud colors. What would you call a loud color? Husband—Yeller, I suppose.

A Champion Husband and Father of the Country.

The other day Captain Worth and Judge Williams rode out to the farm of the former. While sitting in the buggy in front of the cabin of William Brown, a colored tenant, the following conversation took place:

"There seems to be a good many children about here, William. Are they all yours?"

"Yes, sah. All mine; but dese ain't all."

"How many have you got in all?"

"Ain't got but forty, sah. I had forty-seven, but I had bad luck somehow wid de children of my last wife and didn't raise but seven of 'em. De oder seven died."

"How many wives have you had?"

"Ain't had but six, sah."

"Only six?"

"Yes sah, dat's all."

We claim that Upson furnishes the champion husband and father. If any other country can beat William Brown let it trot out its man.—Upson (Ga.) Times.

Revenge is Sweet.

The cold, haughty, purse-bound merchant prince who treats his ribbon-counter gentleman and gentleman's underware salesladies with mere civility or chilling indifference had better be aware. The time may come when their positions may be reversed.

"See here, Jinks," said one of these arrogant millionaires one day to a ninety-pound ribbon-counter clerk, "you want to attend to business, better, young man, and not waste so much time flirting with that red-headed underwear girl across the aisle, mind that."

Enraged and humiliated, the down-trodden ribbon-counter clerk frowns and seeks revenge. His time soon comes, aye, that night!

The purse-proud, cold-blooded merchant goes to the theatre. He buys an admission ticket and stands up, being of an economical turn of mind.

"Let us pass, sir," says a calm, cold voice at his side. He looks down and beholds the ribbon-counter clerk in the magnificence of full dress, with the underwear girl in flowing robes and sixteen button kids hanging to his arm. The eyes of the two men meet, but there is no sign of recognition on the part of the ribbon counter clerk, only a cold, haughty fixed stare as he passes proudly on to the $3 seats reserved for him and the underwear girl, while the snubbed and humiliated merchant prince stands on in the midst of his own bitter reflections.—Detroit Free Press.
