Oregon has ample opportunity to profit by the experience of o'der states in this matter. Illinois, Ohio and other states have passed such laws, but not until the statistics of F.5. is, 1889, viz. JACOE HAMON, Hd. No. but not until the statistics of their idiotic, blind and daf mute asylums have proven that the best interests of the state and of individuals required it. As states become older and communities more settled, the tendency to consanguineous marriage becomes more pronounced, thu seban and as personal interests become involved, the difficulty of passing NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION. a law that will protect the state from the consequences of such marriage is greatly augmented. Hence, while there is no immediate danger that in consinerate coasins will rush into matrimomy in Oregon in force sufficient to make an institution for the care of incapables a necessity of this generation, it will be the part of wisdom to steer clear of future evils begotten by such marriages by the timely enactment of the proposed law.
