HIS DEAD BROTHER.

The Strange Dream of a Federal Officer.

By Which He Was Led to the Spot Where His Brother was Murdered--Something in Dreams--A Strange Story of the Late Civil War.

In a dilapidated portion of the Eastern cemetery of Cuthbert, Ga., on a weather beaten slab may be seen the following inscription:

In a dilapidated portion of the Eastern cemetery of Cuthbert, Ga., on a weather beaten slab may be seen the following inscription:

In 1866 there was stationed in Cuthbert a company of federal soldiers as regulators and general supervisors of the people of the surrounding country.

Colonel Williamson, a man of feeling and discretion, was in command. Under him was Lieutenant Charles Murphy, a young man who was courteous and obliging.

Lieutenant Murphy had a brother in Blakely, who was also an officer in his company. The Blakely officer received orders from his superior one day to proceed on foot, in citizen's clothes, to Cuthbert, where he would receive the funds necessary to pay off the company for the quarter past.

In Cuthbert he spent the night in his brother's tent, and early the next morning set out on the return trip. About six miles out he stopped at a neighboring farm to rest.

While there he disclosed the object of his journey, and told of the money on his person. Among those present was Jim Brown, a farm hand, poor and friendless, filled with the idea that it was no harm to kill a yankee, he set about laying the plans to get the young officer out of the way and to secure the booty.

"Where are you traveling?" said Brown.

"To Blakely," replied the lieutenant.

"Then you are wrong, my friend. This road will never get you there and the farther you go the farther away you will be."

"Indeed!" said the officer in surprise, "how can I reach the right road?"

"I'll agree to put you straight for a quarter," Brown replied. After a little preliminary the two started out--Brown in the lead, Murphy following.

They left the Blakely highway and by taking to the woods and fields succeeded in reaching the swamp of a small muddy branch. This Brown said they would have to cross.

At an opportune time, just as it looked as though no one was near, Brown stepped aside and allowed the federal to pass in front. When by a dextrous and quick movement he drew a pistol and fired, the striking a vital point and producing instant death.

It was but the word of a moment to secure the money and depart. It was not long before a posse secured Brown and lodged him in jail in Cuthbert. A few of the company secured the prisoner and placing a rope around his neck, swung him to a most convenient limb.

Colonel Williamson ran up with a knife in hand and cut him down. He then placed a special guard around him, and at the first opportunity sent him to Macon, where he was tried, convicted and hung. His remains were sent back home and interred. Notwithstanding the

A Bull Breaks up a Funeral.

An exciting episode occurred at the Catholic cemetery at New Brunswick, N. J., in the course of the funeral of Mrs. Kate Carey.

Undertaker Donart's hearse had drawn up in front of the gate and the body was being carried along a path to the tomb, when a bull, having broken loose from a pen in Donart's abattoir, a short distance to the right, tore down the road with a bounding head and a maddened countenance, scattering the mourners, scattering the mourners, scattering the mourners.

Two butchers appeared upon the scene with lasso, but they only succeeded in driving the animal through the crowd of mourners near the grave and on over the gravestones to the gate again.

The bull was now wild with rage and bobbed for the horses of the undertaker. The animals anticipated the attack and sprang down the road on a gallop.

By this time a large crowd had collected. An expert with the lasso made his appearance, and tossing a loop over the head of the bull made a half hitch about an adjoining tree, causing the animal to tumble to the ground, where he was secured.

Turning the Tables on an Auctioneer. A Brooklyn auctioneer named Toins is a popular man as a wit and a gentleman.

No person is offended at what he says, and many a hearty laugh has he provoked by his humorous sayings. He was recently in a sale of venerable household furniture and "fixings."

He had just got to "going, going, and a half, going!" when he saw a smiling countenance upon agricultural shoulders winking at him.

"Winking! Well, I did, so did you wink at me. I thought you were winking as much as to say, 'Keep dark; I'll stick somebody on that lot of stuff, and I'll be winking as much as to say, 'I'll be winking if you don't!'"

A Los Angeles, California, paper rises to remark, and its language is plain, that a conflict between the people on one side and the corporations on the other, is sure to come, and the boys today will have to fight the battle.

The war of the rebellion wiped out the disgrace of slavery but gave birth to a money making greed which has grown into mammoth monopolies, many of which are more powerful for evil than the government is for good.

Someday a great god of mankind will arise, who will consolidate all the corporations, seize the power of government and become an empire.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

Expand the Mind. By seeing as much as you can of the world. But ere you set out either as a tourist, commercial traveler or emigrant--whether you go by rail, steamship or stageboat, provide yourself with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which the traveling public recognizes as the finest medical safeguard and preventive of sea sickness with which any one journeying by land or water can be provided.

It furnishes the most western pioneer adequate protection against malaria, rheumatism and those disorders of the bowels which mislead faint water travel. Its sedative effect upon a stomach perturbed by the rocking of a ship is truly magical, and it is a capital appetizer and nerve invigorator.

Excellent for biliousness and kidney irritation, and it counteracts, in a remarkable degree, the effects of fatigue, physical or mental. After wetting and exposure in inclement weather, it should be used as a preventive.
