PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING

May 16, 1889.

King John of Abyssinia, whose death is announced, died poor. His estate consists of eighty wives and three barrels of rams.

A South African chief sold a gold mine to an English speculator for a hand organ and a rug. It was a pretty near approach to a kingdom of a horse.

A Russian prince who was arrested in New York for stealing and pawning an overcoat asks for a suspension of public judgment. He probably wants a chance to steal the rest of the suit.

The government has only recently finished paying for the capture of Mr. Davis. In 1868 congress appropriated $100,000 to be distributed among the captors, and the last payment out of this fund was not made until last year. Each of the four officers were paid $1,000 and the remainder $88,000 was distributed among no less than 250 persons who claimed to have taken part in his capture.

Under the homestead laws the same person is prohibited from taking out more than one homestead claim. Having taken out one homestead and disposed of it, his right is exhausted. He cannot take a second one. The fact of his owning a farm elsewhere not obtained under the homestead laws, does not preclude him from a homestead right in government lands if he chooses to avail himself of it.

It sometimes costs more to get missionaries home from heathen lands than it cost originally to send them out. The Revs. Taylor, Edwards and Hooper, who were captured by Bushiris and held for ransom, have been released on the payment of $1,000, the sum demanded by their captors, in default of which the cannibals of Zanzibar would have eaten them. As an exchange remark, it is a high price for meat.

The History Company of San Francisco sued T. W. Fealy, of Napa, Cal., with whom a written contract had been made to purchase the Bancroft histories as they were published. Mr. Fealy refused to pay the subscription after receiving a volume or two, and the court which was resorted to, to compel a compliance with the contract has decided in favor of defendant, whose defense was the agent had misrepresented the books.

The local papers are ringing the praises of a Dutch detective on the city force named Raff. A week ago the body of a colored girl was found several miles from the city, bearing evidence of violence. A dozen detectives, amateurs and professional, were at once on the trail. The inimitable Raff found a colored man who had washed a wagon in the creek near by on the day the murder was probably committed. He was arrested and his personal detective assured the world that he had solved the mystery. A few days later an enterprising reporter succeeds in securing a picture of the body. It is printed in the Evening Star. The next morning a citizen reports to the police that the picture resembles one Eliza Foster, the mistress of a mulatto named Thomas, who had frequently quarreled with her of late. The citizen has also discovered that the Foster woman disappeared about the time the murder was committed and was heard quarreling with Thomas on the street the night before. The detectives go to Thomas' house and find him serenely chewing hog and hominy. They thrust the photograph under his nose. His hands drop to his side; the half-chewed food falls from his open mouth; the face is contorted; he is in a palsy of fear. In a day he breaks down and confesses, and the man who was wrongfully accused is released. Still the detectives receive all the credit. Of course the newspaper that had the sense to secure the picture and the citizen who reported his suspicion are only humble instruments through which the astute detective worked.—Washington Cor.

The next big celebration of an historical event will be three years from October next, in commemoration of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus. What a "send off" Columbus will get that day from the American press!

The Michigan legislature has under consideration a bill to substitute hanging for imprisonment for life, as punishment for murder in the first degree. The state has averaged one murder a week for the last two years, and old-fashioned people think that kind of crime is best kept in check by judicious hanging.

At Salem recently two well known men met and one shot the other so he died. It was a plain case where one man armed himself and hunted for the other and wreaked his vengeance because the man he killed had called him dishonest. It is not always prudent to say what you think, but in this case the man who repeated what he heard has the satisfaction to know that his tale-bearing sent one man to eternity and the other to prison and may send him to the gallows. The tale-bearer has a deal of woe to account for in this world, and this chapter of home life covers a woful episode. There is a young widow and her orphaned little ones on one side and the guilty man and his heart-broken parents on the other. Harvey Ogile, the dead man, was widely known and liked as a stirring man and good citizen, brought up—as were both—in that community. The tongue is a dangerous member, said the wise man. Ogile's words and the repetition of them have wrought terrible consequences. It seems that ever in so quiet a community as Salem young men carry revolvers. Hawkins could have defended his character in the courts or face to face, and the course he took is no defense—rather the contrary. Take it all round and it is a lamentable occurrence and teaches several lessons that should be learned without such fearful illustration.—Oregonian.
