Prince Louis de Ligne and Vicomte de Jonghe fought a duel at midnight by torch-light in a French forest. Nothing was wounded except the trees.

The Indians near Reno, Nev., being determined to break up drunkenness among their people, the other day stoned to death a squaw who persisted in getting intoxicated. The method was a radical one—at least as far as the squaw was concerned.

Prof. Seelye, of Amherst, O., boasts that he was once elected to Congress at a cost of five cents. The five cents were spent for a postage stamp, a sheet of paper, and an envelope, with which to accept the nomination. Times have changed since then.

Warned by the frauds practiced under the act granting swamp lands to Oregon, Congress expressly declares in the act for the admission of Washington and other territories that no grant of tide or swamp lands such as had been made to other states, is extended to the new state. Thus the great scandal that has been so prominent in Oregon for many years past will not be repeated in those new states.

It is announced that the Pioneer Mill of San Francisco will suspend businees in a few weeks, which is the result of an unprofitable business for the past few years, owing to the excessive price they were forced to pay for the large amount of foreign wools necessary in the manufacture of certain classes of goods in which they were largely engaged in producing, and which they were unable to pay and successfully compete with European manufactures.

Goldendale, W. T., a few years ago placed the cost of saloon license so high that it amounted to prohibition, so far as the legal prosecution of the traffic is concerned. The enterprising drug store got in, however, and those who understood the combination had no difficulty in getting a "stick" whenever they wanted it. This experience probably taught the temperance element a lesson, for at a late election, license men were chosed, and the saloons have reopened.

It has been decided by the Interior department that where a man had otherwise complied with the pre-emption laws, the fact of his wife and children refusing to live on the land with him would not invalidate his right to title. The cause was one in which Sparks refused to issue patent, although the claimant showed that his wife refused to go and live on the land with him because she wanted to stay at her father's and send her children to school. Assistant Secretary Chandler says the proof is good and that the man shall have his land.

Admiral Porter has been rounding up that old cock-eyed son of destiny and provoker of strife, Ben Battler, in a way not at all pleasing to the bottled up hero of Bermuda Hundred. There is no way under heaven in which the old mischief breeder could render his country so great a service as to promptly, unequivocally and unreservedly die. Admiral Porter's name will shine in history like the brilliancy of the noonday sun, while Ben Butler's will sink into well earned obscurity. Old Ben is a fraud from the ground up.

The czar of Russia, the alleged ruler of 80,000,000 people, is afraid for his life. Spectors of assassins haunt his dreams by night and thrill his heart with fear during the day. He feels that poison lurks in his food, and that even his own courtiers stand ready to stab him. He stands upon a throne of wrong and oppression, and instead of governing the people he oppresses them. Our presidents go hunting, fishing, travel over the country in safety and mingle with the people, while the czar, surrounded by all the pomp and circumstance of war, skulks around the back way like a hunted beast. The people all over the world are making it very uneasy for crowded heads.
