Moral Influence of Teachers.

While our public schools are established for the purpose of training the intellect, they are not less so for the cultivation of sound morals. In the harmonious development of the physical, mental and moral powers lies the future of our land. The upright young man and woman are the hope of every nation. The foundation of a truthful, industrious and sober life may be laid in the school room. Some one has said, "Whatever you would introduce into a country, you must put it in the schools." The character of the great mass of citizens of a country is determined by the instruction imparted in its common schools. Punctuality, industry, perseverance, economy, liberality, justice, submission to the authority of law, truthfulness and reverence for God and his law may and should be inculcated in every school room. To do this, the teacher must himself be possessed of these. "All that is in a man," says Emerson, "speaks out in the tone of his voice, in his manners, his deportment. It often speaks more decidedly, and makes a deeper impression than the words which he utters." A teacher, then needs not to tell us whether he is christian or unbeliever, a gentleman or a clown, sincere in his profession or an insidious hypocrite. All that he stands out in his daily life in characters so plain that he who runneth may read. "As is the teacher, so is the school," is perhaps more true than that other maxim, "Like people, like priest."

A dentist in New York a few days ago extracted a lady's thirty-two teeth—all she had—at a single sitting.

Henry Stickney had an experience of Tawas City, Mich., recently that doesn't fall to one man in a million. He was 21 years old at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon, and at 1:30 as he was passing the court house, and officer took him inside and made a juryman of him.

The Old Home.

An old home acquires power over the heart with course of time; it comes by degrees to touch the imagination with a sense of life inherent in itself. Its timbers are not dead wood. As the vibrations of the music constrain the fibers of the violin till, year by year, it gives forth a fuller and deeper tone, so the vibrations of life as generations go by shape the walls of a home into a responsive accord with the human experience that goes on within them. Birth and death, joy and sorrow, hope and disappointment—all that men endure and enjoy, give to it a constantly increasing sanctity and a power to affect the hearts of those who dwell within it. Memory awakens imagination. Each generation has set its lamp upon the home in some change, some improvement. The lapse of years alone makes it venerable, but if a succession of kindly humane and loving men and women have dwelt in it it becomes the memorial happiness and an incentive to excellence. The older it is the sweeter and richer garden does it become of human charities and affections. Scribner's.

A Phenomenon.

Electricity or lightning, which ever it may be, has been performing some rather queer species in this country lately. Several weeks ago mention was made of an experience G. W. Barnes had with an electrified stove in a lone cabin on Camp creek; and now a similar phenomenon is reported on Willow creek, about 18 miles north of Prineville. On Friday of last week the elements were charged with electricity and occasional peals of thunder were heard. One of J. H. Crooks' little girls was playing about the house, when she put her hand upon a heating stove in which there was no fire, and experienced a severe electric shock. Mr. Crooks was called to the house and took hold of the stove with both hands, receiving a shock which almost knocked him down. This rather aroused his curiosity and he began experimenting. Whenever the stove was touched with a stick or piece of metal a spark would emit from it and a continuous crackling sound was kept up in the stove for about fifteen minutes, when the electricity seemed to leave it. In a short time it returned, and lasted for about five minutes, when the clouds cleared away, and the electricity left the stove. Another stove in the house in which there was a fire was not affected. To say the least, this a rather peculiar freak, and we believe is quite uncommon.—Oreolo Review.

It is reported that the sugar trust has locked up 300,000 barrels of sugar, preparatory to putting up the price. This is a year of disasters. Floods, fires and drought have visited different portions of the country, and millions of dollars' worth of property have been destroyed. Next year may be one of plenty, and more than offset the misfortunes of this. The trusts appear to have this country by the tail. The people are patient and forbearing, but if something is not done to remedy this trust business, by and by the people will have the trust unknives by the tail. In the event of no relief, there can be but one result.

Boys and girls take down your geography and carefully read this issue of the News, and as you come to a country, city or town, lake or river, find it on the map. By keeping up this practice each week you will learn more of geography in three months than you will learn a six months' school. Try it and see how interesting it will be.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug 20, '89

ED. GRANT CO. NEWS:—

The hot weather oppresses the average office seeker, and as he naps his hot face he tells in a confidential whisper, that he is only waiting for a renunciation. He no longer stops at the Ebbitt House though he daily haunts its nearly deserted corridors like an uneasy ghost. The fact is that the movements of the President excites little interest here as enough of him has been seen to justify one in deciding that he will do nothing surprising. And outside the close profession of politics, this is a pleasant state of affairs. Only the self-selected statesmen mourn and will not be comforted.

You can never tell when a politician's permanently done for. Take for example Hon. James W. Reed, formerly of North Carolina. A number of years ago Mr. Reed represented the fifth district of that state in the House. He was an able, companionable, easy going man and he became involved in financial difficulties, resigned his seat in congress and left North Carolina under a cloud. Few knew where he had gone. On the frontier he commenced life over again, and now reports come from Idaho that he has a fine chance of being chosen as United States Senator, if the democrats have a majority in the newly organized States legislature.

The latest development in the California Sharon Hill-Terry drama created a profound impression in Washington. The shock to public feeling is to be attributed more to the indignity offered to the Supreme court, and through that to the killing of the misguided and unscrupulous Terry. While no one disputes that the deputy marshal was not to be excused in killing Terry unless he knew the justice's life was in danger, still public sentiment would be largely with him even had he no reason to so believe. On the immunity of judges from danger of personal hurt on account of acts committed in the fearless discharge of their duty, rests the sanctity of the law. And marshal Seagle, in his wild western way, pretty well supported it.

Lieut. Dick Arnold was yesterday made superintendent of street and alley cleaning for the District, an appointment that recalls a police department scandal in the first part of President Cleveland's administration. A ridiculous ex-comb named Walker, a real estate dealer, had just been appointed Mayor and superintendent of police. Walker attended a fashionable church and after his appointment always attended services in full uniform, an object to behold and admired by, and he generally departed hastily in the middle of services as if the police duty was at issue. In fact Walker succeeded in making such a howling use of himself that his official career rather abruptly terminated and shortly after his discovery of an alleged plot to "blow" members of Congress who were inclined to be indiscreet and to thereby retain their influence in favor of certain pending unscrupulous favors of the district police committee of exposure. It was this scandal that rightly or wrongly, occasioned Lieut. Arnold's discharge.

"Murderer's Row" at the district

He was then asked what he wanted. He wanted to see the admiral. What did he want to see the admiral for? To be paid for one of the cattle in his care which had been slain by the admiral's people. What was he going to do about it in case he was not paid? They impudently. Well, he was going to take it out of the English fleet. What was he going to take it out with? With a new blade.

The admiral was informed that there was a Yankee on board threatening to lick the fleet with an armament of one or two cannons, and a revolution was expected, and not a moment was to be lost in taking the admiral's ship to sea.
