GOLD MINE FOR SALE

Situated five miles from Canyon City, and known as the

FRED MILLER LEDGE.

Is partly developed, and carries free gold, assaying from seven to twenty-five dollars per ton. Situated on the mountain, so that the cost of getting out the ore is nominal. Consists of about 1,500 feet of main ledge and spurs running there to. Good wagon road, ore chute, and about fifty feet of tunnel. Price

Two Thousand Dollars.

Reasons for selling: Owner does not desire to engage in mining himself, and being interested in numerous other locations wishes to dispose of this property to induce capital to this vicinity. Specimens of ore from this mine can be seen and obtained at this office for testing purposes, and intending purchasers will be shown over the grounds at any time by Mr. Miller. For further information address Mr. FRED MILLER, Canyon City, or the NEWS OFFICE.

FRIED AND EATEN.

A Girl's Horrible Fate--Her Shin Bones Were Dainty Morsels, and Were Cracked for the Marrow.

The Cape Times (Africa) says that Sir Theophilus Shepstone, in a letter to the Royal Colonial Institute, tells some horrible stories of the cannibalism of the African race. He says: "I have heard many a stirring story of escapes from the cannibals from the lips of those who were captured, and had themselves listened to discussions as to whether they would eat tough or tender when they were cooked. I have myself conversed with several men who escaped after having been captured by 'Amazimu,' or 'Man eaters,' and after having been taken off to furnish the next feast for their captors, and with one—a chief—who was compelled by the cannibals to carry the pot in which he was told he himself would be cooked."

"Old Marweni one of the Kafirs told me that recently he and two companions had been deported by Matiwane to take a girl to a chief-tain beyond Basutoland, to whom she was to be given in marriage. 'Well, people of my father,' said he, 'I told the mothers to make some bread of boiled and then hard-baked maize, and the next morning we each stuck our sticks through a loaf of bread, and taking our knobkerries and our assegais, and rolling our blankets up and singing them over our shoulders, took the poor, weeping maiden from her mother and started. Through two rivers we had to swim, and get through as best we could with the girl, who could not swim. But we cut down a large bundle of dry weeds, and binding them together so as to make a sharp point of their ends, placing the bride-elect on it, and piloted it, point forward, over the river. The lions about this time were very numerous, and it was a common matter for those who were too old to catch game to eat people every day until they got used to it, and preferred human to game flesh. Oh! I will never forget that first night. We had to sleep in a bleak, miserable spot, and had chopped down a few bushes with Mazuka's (one of my companions) ax, and made a screen for the girl, and then made a fire to windward of the screen, and having set an ant heap alight on either side, we all lay down to sleep.

"It was pitch dark. I fell asleep. I awoke with a fearful feeling. The water was flowing all around us, a dark band of thick clouds which as the sun set, we had seen to northwestward, had rolled down upon us and burst over our heads. The lightning was blazing and blinding—broad and quivering ribbon-like streams of it danced bluely on every side, and the bellowing thunder crashed as if it were going to kill the earth. We were too frightened to speak, or even to get up out of the water, when suddenly the dog that was with us howled and yelped and tore as hard as he could, right over us, and the next instant with a terrible roar, almost like the thunder itself, a huge lion sprang upon us and bit Makuza.

"Friends, I shall never, never forget the dull, crunching quash that the brute's teeth made on Makuza's bones. We struck wildly at him with sticks of the dead fire, and saw by the blaze of the lightning that he was a male lion of the large black-haired species. But, my people, it was over in a moment, and the great beast leaped off with our friend in his huge jaws, while another vivid flash of lightning blinded us again, and another clap of thunder seemed to deafen, stun and deprive us of all action.

"At last the miserable day dawned, and we had to go on as the girl wouldn't be left alone, and we were afraid to take her with us to look for what was left of poor Makuza's body, because the lion might take her also, and then our chief would kill us. However, it was no use looking for our lost companion, especially as after the lion had done with him the hyenas, jackals, wild dogs, etc., would fall upon all that was left.

After we got some distance from the spot, and the sun was up and hot, we looked back and could see the vultures circling overhead about the place where we had slept and ever and anon dropping their long legs and claws, and swooping down to the ground, and we knew only too well what that meant. Alas! it was a miserable time that those two awful days in Basutoland; and I the only one that was to return!

"As the old Kafir was reciting this story, with all the ever-glowing eloquence and strong graphic powers of oratory possessed by these people, I say, to an eminent and singular degree, it was most interesting to watch the faces of his mute and immovable auditors as in the Kafir but the flickering firelight danced upon their swarthy and enrapt features. Not a sound could be heard, except the e. y. n. o. w. and then a deep chestnut-toned 'Ough!' which spoke eloquently of the concentrated attention paid to the tale of the narrator.

"Yes, people of my father, resumed the old Marweni, the next day! The second day in Basutoland was even more terrible, if possible. We had not gone far when the girl, pointing to something running down the steep side of a great mountain we were walking past, said, 'what's that?' We looked and immediately recognized from the wild look, the head-long speed, and the long, upright, uncut hair, the fearful 'Izimu,' or 'human body eater.' I quickly told the girl it was all right, and not to be afraid, and told my companion, Sondoda, to stand by, and we would kill him, as he was only one. But alas! Sondoda was young, and the shocking stories he had heard about the Amazimu had now, when he was actually looking at one of the demons of his nursery tales, utterly paralyzed him, so that he was almost powerless, while the strange being ran shouting down the hill.

"However, I engaged him myself, but it was all to no purpose. I must cut the story short. It sickens me. With a wild yell seven or eight more cannibals burst over a little knoll to our left and were on us like lightning just I struck my opponent down with my battle-axe. I now received a stunning blow on my head and instinctively ran. The cannibals left me and busied themselves binding the girl and Sondoda, who had, however, so far regained himself to strike a few blows to wound one fiend with his assegai. Just as I got to an ant-bear hole in the long grass I looked back, and seeing the Amazimu still securing what they doubtless thought their birds in the hand, I popped down into the hole and drew down after me onto my head the earth, grass and twigs that the ant-bear had cast out. The cannibals came after me and looked for me awhile, but, not seeing me, seemed to think that they had enough for their larler, and returned to their victims.

"After some time, as I heard them busily engaged, I ventured to pop my head carefully out of the hole. I could see nothing at first, but, gently dividing the grass with my hands, saw the brutes making a fire, while the ghastly looking old hag appeared on the scene with a large, roughly-made earthen pot. I now found I was badly wounded by one of their broad-cutting assegais, and had my head nearly split open. Why say anything more? I saw them stab the girl and Sondoda, and seem still to hear the dull thud of the assegai on their bodies, and their thrillingly mournful shrieks, but what could I do?—half stunned and badly wounded—and one to eight. I saw them cut my dear friends up—roast the shin bones first—eat the meat off them and crack the bones for the marrow. I sat entranced, quite forgetting I was showing my head. They boiled the rest. I can't tell any more. The night now falling, I crept out of the hole and ran steadily toward Natal for my life. The good spirit of my dead father, I suppose, kept the lions off me. I never saw the dog after the lion had killed Makuza. I got home the next night—half in a dream, sick at heart, miserable and melancholy. I told my sad tale to the chief and indunas assembled. The dog was at home."
