

January 23, 1890.

No Man's Land is a narrow strip of territory west of the one hundredth meridian, ceded by Texas to the United States and usually classed with Indian Territory, although not formerly annexed to it or any other state or territory by any act of congress.

An Ohio man has sued a wealthy widow for breach of promise of marriage. This is reversing the usual order of things with a vengeance. We have always regarded breach of promise suits as a diversion in which only widows and maidens of uncertain years were permitted to indulge. This Ohio man should be ashamed of himself for setting so ungallant a precedent.

The fact that there was last year a great falling off in the numbers of immigrants coming to this country from Europe is a matter occasioning comment. The army of invasion is still far too large, footing up nearly or quite 400,000 for the year, but shows a falling off of nearly 70,000 as compared with the arrivals in 1888, and almost 80,000 less than came over in 1887. The character of the immigration is also greatly changed for the better.

Senator Pettigrew has introduced a bill in congress providing that in all land cases which had been proved up prior to January 1, 1890, and where innocent parties have obtained an interest by purchase or otherwise, patents shall be issued. The bill is intended to clear up a large number of cases all through the Northwest which have been hung up for years, and where it is almost an impossibility for the present holder to make proof that the law has been complied with.

The British lion has begun to roar at Portugal because Major Serpa Pinto has picked a quarrel with Makololo, an African potentate, shot several hundred of his followers to pieces with Gatlings and captured two British flags recently presented to Makololo by the British consul. Thinking himself deserted by England, Makololo threw up his hands. Portugal, being undersized and consumptive, will naturally be compelled to eat crow and pay well for the privilege, but not before she has made lots of trouble for England. The two British flags were publicly burned the other day by a mob, and now look out for some trouble, for John Bull will certainly resent this insult to his flag. Save your cattle and ship beef over to the seat of war.

Secretary Noble of the general land office has passed in a decision which orders a patent to be issued to Congressman Hansbrough, of North Dakota, on his homestead at Devil's Lake. The land department canceled his claim in 1886, claiming that he had not maintained his residence on his homestead in accordance with the law. Mr. Hansbrough was postmaster at Devil's Lake. The claim was advanced that his homestead was beyond the limit of the territory in which mail was delivered from his office. As it was held that his residence was not within his postal bailiwick, his claim was canceled. After reviewing the evidence in the case, the secretary holds that the law was complied with in good faith, and reverses the decision of the former land commissioner. He orders that a patent be issued to the congressman.

In less than three months the political pot will be on the stove and the water pretty well heated, the little states will have been broken and the full-flaged and pledged candidate will be on the anxious seat. Just one-half of them of course will be defeated, and then things will move on just as they did before. The tax gatherer will get around just the same, and the tariff question will go to roost for several months at least. There is going to be some fun, however, before the election is over, Jim Lotan will test Joe Simon's boiler, and Joe will put a spoke or two in Lotan's off hind wheel that will probably make his longer axis or coupling pole out of parallel to the plane of his elliptical. J. H. Mitchell will be brought into prominence by the Oregonian and Harvey Scott will get mad before the dog days. Yes there will be whole doodles of fun.—Wasco Sun.
