

THE GRANT COUNTY NEWS.

January 30, 1890.

A writer takes a whole column in a newspaper to tell "What we drink," while another has only to wink at the bartender.

"It is no disgrace to be poor." That was first said when the great mass of people were not worshipping the almighty dollar.

There may be some satisfaction in booming favorite candidates for state offices, but there is devilish little money in it.

A Canadian, being lowered into his grave, groaned in time to be saved. He must have been thinking of the undertaker's bill.

Congress is considering the matter of abolishing the Louisiana lottery. One method advocated is a proposition to refuse mail facilities to any newspaper publishing its advertisements.

It is feared in the south that the universal desire to erect one grand monument to Jefferson Davis may express itself in various affectionate but inadequate efforts to erect monuments at several different places.

When the youthful ruler of the Chinese Empire was compelled to marry a certain daughter of a high estate nobleman recently, he kicked most vigorously, but his royal mamma persisted and was successful. Now the little fellow has asserted his prerogative and he vehemently refuses to see either his mother or his wife.

Secretary Noble has decided that married women can make timber land entries or purchase such lands in the states of California, Oregon, Washington and Nevada, provided it is conclusively shown that the entry is made for her own use and benefit, and not for the benefit of herself and husband jointly.

It is probable, says the Salem Statesman, that the next legislature will again have to meet the necessity for more room at the state asylum for the insane, if not also at the penitentiary. The new wing at the asylum will soon be filled up completely, at the present rate of increase. The rapid increase in the number of patients is rather the result of the growth of our population than an epidemic of insanity.

Two young couples went into a justice of the peace's office in a town in Pennsylvania, a few days ago, and after some bantering and jesting, were married "for fun." The justice coolly informed them that they were really married. One of the girls was engaged to marry another young man, who, as he heard of the affair, was gunning for the fellow that had married his girl. It was an off day all around and two divorces will be the result. The justice must have been a fool, with the other four for good seconds.

Speaking of local taxes, in his message to the Massachusetts legislature, Governor Brackett said: "The subject is too vast for any detailed discussion on an occasion like this." Mr. Brackett might have said truly, with even more emphasis, that it is so vast and so complicated that neither legislators nor economists, as a rule, have any settled conviction upon it. The levying of taxes by the various states is done in a haphazard way, without uniformity, and often with absurd, unjust and destructive results. As a partial correction of some obvious inequalities in the Massachusetts system Governor Brackett recommends a tax on legacies, with the exemption of small estates.

It is now proposed to postpone the world's fair from 1892 to 1895, it being alleged that it would have a demoralizing effect on national politics for the henchmen of either of the great parties of the country to control the expenditure of $15,000,000 of public money during a presidential year. Chicago and New York are still the leading contestants for the prize, and as neither cares to have the matter of location finally determined at present it is quite probable that the postponement will be generally advocated. It may be necessary to call it something else that the Columbus Exposition, though it should be taken into consideration in this connection that Chris. didn't really know he had discovered the continent until his second trip across the water.

There is but one thing more costly than European peace; that is European war. Americans can afford to have their little standing army laughed at, contented that no more than a toy force is necessary.

Stanley discovered an extension of a lake; a range of mountains, and almost impenetrable forest, numerous tribes of hostile Africans, and tons of elephant tusks in the heart of the dark continent. The tusks are valuable.

The question for the moment in the minds of all good citizens is: How can our jury system be made purer and better? That there is something monstrous in the fact that one man can stay the will of eleven strikes the ordinary mind as being all wrong. And yet the principle of unanimity in juries is so deeply interwoven into our constitutional system that there is little probability it can ever be changed.

The Mormons have secured the postponement of Idaho's admission as a state. The committee decided that inasmuch as a case was now pending before the supreme court, involving the constitutionality of such test oaths as required by the constitution adopted by the people of Idaho regarding the Mormons, the bill for the admission of Idaho should not be acted upon until the supreme court rules upon the question.

The Grave Gets Tired Napping. Recently, for certain unexplained reasons, bodies lying about, though always lying as if they were going to die, but waiting to do it. They dry up, wither, and decay finally, but in the meantime never leaving their beds. It is a curious thing to see a body lying in a coffin, and yet the body is not dead. It is a curious thing to see a body lying in a coffin, and yet the body is not dead. It is a curious thing to see a body lying in a coffin, and yet the body is not dead.
