Nothing Like Success

Nothing will make a tenderfoot milder than the smoke from giant powder. Almost anyone can stand black powder smoke but that of the giant powder has upset many a tenderfoot's stomach. Nausea and a terrible headache is the result to an unfortunate tenderfoot who is taking his first experience in this line. Giant powder smoke will upset a man's stomach as quickly as will the ocean tossed steamer make a person seasick.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.
THE CRY OF MILLIONS!
OH, MY BACK!
STOP IT NOW,
SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have without relief. About the 10th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over when I sat down. It was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to rest on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Hensley, with the OREGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and in the accomplishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.

Smoke of Giant Powder.

Nothing will make a tenderfoot milder than the smoke from giant powder. Almost anyone can stand black powder smoke but that of the giant powder has upset many a tenderfoot's stomach. Nausea and a terrible headache is the result to an unfortunate tenderfoot who is taking his first experience in this line. Giant powder smoke will upset a man's stomach as quickly as will the ocean tossed steamer make a person seasick.

There are many strange things about the use of giant powder in the mines. In the winter season it will freeze and must then be thawed out before it can be used and sometimes the miner will put the stick of giant powder in his boot top or under his flannel shirt, and the heat of the body will thaw it out while the hole is drilled for the blast. Usually, though, the powder is thawed over the fire in the blacksmith shop, near the mine. I have sometimes seen it take fire and burn rapidly, but never supposed it would explode under such circumstances. But I have since learned that it is dangerous when it catches fire, for I sometime ago read of a miner whose body and limbs had been terribly mangled by the explosion of giant powder, which had caught while he was thawing it out. — W. C. F.

AN OLD MAID'S SOLILOQUY.

To take or not to take it, that is the question. Whether it is better to end this earthly career as a spinster—leaving the smiles of those who would "marry me" for a memory—than to live in the arms of a man who will leave me a widow, and my children orphans, is a question that has troubled my mind for many a day. I have sometimes thought that I should like to see the inside of a man's mind, and to see how he gets on in the world. But I have never had the opportunity. I have sometimes thought that I should like to see the inside of a woman's mind, and to see how she gets on in the world. But I have never had the opportunity. I have sometimes thought that I should like to see the inside of a child's mind, and to see how he gets on in the world. But I have never had the opportunity.

A Remarkable Composition.

A school entertainment was given in one of the rural districts, not so far from New York city, in which a prominent part was taken by a young daughter of a well-known New York business man. The young miss was to read a story of her own composition, and as a special mark of confidence she was allowed to prepare it without any assistance, and it was exempted from the usual scrutiny of teachers or parents.

On the evening of the entertainment the room was crowded with the elite of the village. The young authoress was given the post of honor on the programme, and as she read her story it was received with generous applause. It was a story of the love and trials of a young couple in the country, and depicted the customary scenes supposed to occur in such cases. In the conclusion she told of what became of almost everything on the farm, that was there when the hero and heroine were young and suffering. The following was the way she disposed of the oxen:

"And the dear old oxen, Billy and Bess, they continued to work patiently for many years, and their children, which were little calves when George and May were young, are the oxen now, toiling as patiently as their father and mother used to."

This part of the story had a remarkable effect on the elders in the audience, and the poor little authoress could not imagine why her father looked so stern and her mother flushed up so.

Hereafter her compositions will be edited before they are read in public.

Cliff Dwellers.

One of the most attractive portions of Colorado if not in the entire west, for the archaeologist, is that part of the state in which are found the cliff dwellings of a long extinct race. The district in which these ruins are located covers an area of nearly six thousand square miles, chiefly in southern Colorado, but which includes narrow belts in the adjacent territories of New Mexico, Utah, and Arizona.

The ruins of this region, like most others of the extreme west and south, are the remnants in a great measure of stone structures. It is evident, however, that a great portion of the villages and dwellings of the lowlands which comprise this district have been of material other than stone, frequently, doubtless, of rubble and adobe combined.

The cliff houses conform in shape to the floor of the niche or shelf on which they are built. They are of firm, neat masonry, and the manner in which they are attached or cemented to the cliffs is simply marvelous. Their construction has cost a great deal of labor, the rock and mortar of which they are built having been brought hundreds of feet up the most precipitous places. They have a much more modern look than the valley and cave remains, and are probably in general more recent, belonging rather to the close than to the earlier parts of a long period of occupation.

It seems probable that a rich reward awaits the fortunate archaeologist who shall be able to thoroughly investigate the historical records that lie buried in the masses of ruins, the unexplored caves and the still mysterious burial places of the northwest. But it is quite improbable that any certain light will ever be thrown on the origin of this curious race or its history.

Curious Uses for Paper.

Railroad car wheels made of paper are more durable than iron.

When strong fibre is used paper can be made into a substance so hard that it can scarcely be scratched.

Black walnut picture frames are made of paper and so colored that no one can tell them from the original wood.

An Italian monk has succeeded in constructing an organ where the pipes are made of paper pulp. It has 1400 pipes of various sizes.

The latest idea is to use paper instead of wood for lead pencils, by using a patent preparation by which it can be cut as easily as the softest wood.

Not Afraid of the Woods.

"Let us go out and take up claims," said one of the Misses Kendrick a few months ago.

"That is just the thing I was thinking of," chimed in the other two sisters in chorus.

The Misses Kendrick are three sisters who came to Tacoma last fall from Iowa. They are brave, young women, and are not afraid of work. When they first came to the city they tried to get claims but could find nothing suitable at the time. Not discouraged they went to work and earned what money they could until spring weather set in when they again began looking around for a suitable claim that they could file and enter upon. They could not find any surveyed lands, but at last they very suitably discovered lands could be found in the Gray's Harbor country. Last Tuesday they started for Gray's Harbor and will take up squatter's claims at once.

The Kendrick sisters are respectable young women of prepossessing appearance and retiring dispositions. They have a good common school education, and being good singers, they will undoubtedly keep themselves from despairing and make the forest melodious with their songs.

To-Morrow You Die!

"Eat, drink, and be merry!"
Vanity of vanities, and all is vanity!"

The past is irretrievable, and no one can doubt that the immediate or remote future is hastening to execute upon every one of us the common doom of all the race. Pain, sickness, disappointment, persecution even, all encroach more and more as the days go by upon the always limited hours of enjoyment, until, from natural causes alone, the zest of the healthful and unreflecting youth is gradually displaced by the growing distaste for the unsatisfying frills and pursuits of the average life. The taste of ashes is already in the mouth. Yet there have been, and perhaps still are, many professional marauders (by a blasphemous misnomer commonly styled divines) who seem to feel in their special mission, like the locusts sent upon Egypt, to swarm over the land devouring every green thing—whose morbid enunciations are calculated to dry up the fountains of innocent pleasure, and to keep the soul in a fever of perturbation and apprehension, until the once blooming gardens of the soul are left parched and barren like oriental lands swept by the burning Sirocco.

What wonder then, that to escape the contemplation of the fearful prospect thus presented, man everywhere turns to the transient delights and illusive joys of the present as the only refuge? The pulpit thunders, "Thou art dust! an atom, and thy name is transitory!" and nature confirms it. What shall he do? As the ship goes down will he not burst into the spirit room and drink oblivion? Thus in all ages and all climes he has sought for Mandragora, Poppy, Hashesh—something, anything to yield forgetfulness of inevitable fate and produce a present evanescent bliss.—St. Louis Magazine.

It is only a broad and generous mind that is capable of holding strong opinions of its own, and, at the same time, respecting the opinion of others. We often shrug our shoulders and say "Oh, she's a crank," forgetting that, after all, the little, slangy, expressive word means only some one who does not think the same as we do.

"The man to be feared for the trouble that he can make in the west is not the dead shot who has killed a dozen men," said an old timer from Arizona at the Midland last night, "but the young blood, a combination of the cowboy and the tenderfoot. The former is usually quick, cool and level headed, and when he shoots he shoots to kill. The latter is in a hurry to get into a fight and will never listen to reason or common sense. The moment he gets into trouble he thinks that his duty is to draw a revolver and commence shooting. He may probably hit the man he is trying to kill. He is like the fool friend that we are constantly trying to be delivered from. His capacity for mischief is unbounded, but his plans for getting out of a scrape are never matured and are sure to fall through. I don't object to taking a hand in the fight when a lot of experienced men are on the ground but when a lot of greenhorns commence shooting I don't object to hunting up a new location.—Ex.

A wise man plays the fool when he enters into an argument on the street corner, for it is easy for the jester to get a corner on the merriment when logic is slain with a smile.

A Seattle woman fainted on the street the other day because her husband took off his hat to her. He made it all right with her afterward, however, by assuring her that he had mistaken her for some one else.
