THE MODERN BARBER.

He Differs in Many Ways From the Old Shaver of Two Decades Ago.
 This is indeed an age of progress, writes Frank Roberts in the American. The Sciences, literature and art have contributed to the physical and intellectual improvement of the human race. Inventors have perfected machines which lessen the hours of labor, and thus give to man more time to devote to pursuits of pleasure and to the adornment of his person. Fine clothes and jewels, however, do not improve a man's appearance if he neglects the attention of the barber. That the barber's services are being more and more appreciated is evidenced by the increased number of "sanorious parlors," and in the improved character of the men engaged in the tonsorial profession.

Twenty years ago a barber-shop resembled a gin factory in the variety of odors which it contained, and a second-hand store in the appearance of its few articles of furniture and adornment. The barbers, too, were in harmony with their surroundings.
 They wore, of course, of various sizes and dispositions, but they always wore long, greasy hair and dyed mustaches. They were "boozers" and chewed tobacco, and expectorated freely upon the hair-bestyry floor. They "saved" off the whiskers and "clipped" off the hair of their customers and told vulgar stories meanwhile. But the public had very little use for barbers in those days. Gentlemen mostly "rasped" off their own stubble, and the poor "scrapers" did not earn enough to dress decently or to indulge in more refined tastes if they had them.

But now how changed the appearance of the modern barber-shop and how vastly improved the condition of the barber! As fashions began to require comb-over patronize the barber more frequently the business became more remunerative and a better and more intelligent class of men engaged in the profession. As competition increased each barber tried to excel in workmanship and in making his shop more attractive and inviting, and now we have "sano-rious parlors" that are positively magnificent in respect to their appointments and decorations. Even the humblest barber-shops are at least clean and neat, and have improved, luxurious chairs and better arrangements for the comfort and convenience of their patrons. The "bum" barber and the "boozers" have given way to men of perfect appearance, courteous manners and correct habits. The art of shaving has been regarded as a menial, but the barber has raised himself in public estimation, and his calling has been advanced to one of necessary and respectability.

PARDON HIS OPPRESSOR.

How a Missouri Governor Returned Good For Evil.
 Sitting in the rotunda of the Alexander Hotel of this city, says a Louisville letter to the New York Sun, Proctor Knott told this story:
 "It was the most remarkable scene I ever witnessed. It occurred during my early manhood, when I was Attorney-General of Missouri. Robert Stewart was then Governor of that State. One day I was in his private office when he pardoned a steamboat man for some crime. What it was I have forgotten, but that does not matter.
 The man had been brought from the penitentiary to the governor's office. He was a large, powerful fellow, with the rough manners of his class.
 "The Governor looked at the steamboat man and seemed strangely affected. He scrutinized him long and closely. Finally he signed the document that restored him to liberty, but before he handed it to him he said: 'You will commit some other crime and be in the penitentiary again, I will not do that. You have a wife and children, and they are depending on you.
 The man solemnly promised that he would not. The governor then handed him a large, powerful fellow, with the rough manners of his class.
 "You will go back on the river and be a mate again, I suppose?"
 "The man replied that he would.
 "Well, I want you to promise me one thing," said the Governor, "I want you to judge your word that when you are a mate again you will never take a bullet of wood in your hand and drive a stick boy out of a bunk to help you load your boat on a stor-y night." The steamboat man said he would not, and he inquired what the governor meant by asking him such a question.
 "The Governor replied: 'Because some day that boy may become a Governor, and you may want him to pardon you for a crime. One day, a stor-y night many years ago you stopped your boat on the Mississippi river to take on a load of wood. There was a boy on board who was working his passage from New Orleans to St. Louis, but he was very sick and was lying in a bunk.
 You had plenty of men to do the work, but you went to that boy with a stick of wood in your hand and drove him with blows and curses out into the wretched night, and kept him toiling like a slave until the load was completed. The boy said: 'Boy, here is your pardon. Never again be guilty of such brutality.' And the man, covering and hiding his face, went out. As I never heard of him again I suppose he took care not to break the law.'" A CHICKEN'S DEVOTION.

The Bird Staves Itself After Its Master's Departure from Home.
 Stories of dove whose devotion to their masters was so great that they abandoned themselves to starvation after their master's death are not rare, but few would have expected a chicken to prove capable of such an attachment. But the most animating, in general, are those of the doves. It becomes that even the humblest of them have capacities like our own.
 A correspondent of La Nature, a French scientific journal, relates that his young brother had made a pet of a chicken of the Houdan variety. Every morning, in coming out of the house, the young man brought with him a handful of corn, and grain, or of something else that chickens like, and little by little his Houdan pet acquired the habit of following him about the place.
 In a grove near the house there was a bench. When the young man reached this bench he invariably seated himself, and the fowl, jumping up by his side, pecked the food from his hand, and was petted by being stroked on the head and back.
 This had gone on for quite a long time when the young man left home to go to college. For the first day or two the chicken seemed not to be appreciable over the loss of its friend, but took its food as the usual.
 After a few days, however, the fowl seemed to become aware that its friend was not coming back, and it was seized all at once with an unaccountable melancholy. It lingered morning after morning under the windows of the house as if waiting for its master to come out.
 Finally it betook itself to the bench where its master had been accustomed to feed it and there it remained, its head under its wing, almost motionless, day and night. I was unable to try to tempt it with food, the chicken refused to look up when I most tempting handfuls of grain or slugwere thrown down before it. Its eyelids were closed, and its intention to die became so evident that it was deemed merciful to kill it.
