Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Some one has said that the greatest of all Novelists, and he never spoke more truly, and he might have added with equal force, that merit is the essence of success. Wisdom's Robertine is the synonym of merit, and its history is success. The magical effects of this preparation have been attested by thousands of the leading ladies of society and the stage. It is the only article ever discovered which gives a Natural and Beautiful tint to the complexion, at the same time removing all roughness of the face and arms and leaving the skin soft, smooth and velvety. It has long been the study of chemists to produce an article that while it would beautify the complexion would also have the merit of being harmless, but these two important qualities were never brought together until combined in

THE CRY OF MILLIONS!
OH, MY BACK!
STOP IT NOW.
SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Henley, with the OREGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.

CARRYING THEIR YOUNG.

How Woodcocks Carry Their Offspring from One Place to Another.

One of the most interesting traits about the woodcock is the fact of its occasionally conveying its young through the air, which is done by only one or two other birds. This is no recent discovery. The fact was known as early as the middle of last century, though Gilbert White rightly surmised that those observers were mistaken who fancied the young were conveyed either by or in the bill. It is just as erroneous, however, to substitute the claws, as some have done. The truth is that, when the parent bird wishes to convey her young one from a place of danger to one of safety, the tiny thing is gently pressed between the feet and against the breast, the aid of the bill being resorted to only when the burden has been hastily taken up. In this way the whole of the brood is sometimes removed from one part of a wood to another when the birds have been much disturbed. On this subject there is an interesting note in "Lays of the Deer Forest," by the brothers Stuart: "One morning sitting on a gray stone, I saw a dark eye which was fixed upon mine from the bed of leaves before me, when suddenly the little brown head of a young woodcock peeped out from the feathers of the old one's breast, uttering that plaintive cry for which language has no sign. There were two more young woodcocks, and to relieve the anxiety of the mother, I left her. Near the place where I found her there was a soft, green strip, such as woodcocks love. I had no doubt that the family would be there next day; and as I passed near I turned aside to see what they were doing. Upon a dry bank half way down the brae, I almost stumbled over a bird, which rose at my feet, and as it darted through the trees I saw that it had something in its claws, and at the same time I heard the plaintive cry of young woodcocks just under my feet. I looked down—there were two, and I thought a hawk had carried off the third, and perhaps killed the mother. This, however, I found on following the bird, was the old woodcock, which, being flushed again suddenly, after a low flight of only a few yards dropped what it was carrying—her own young woodcock. This trait may be confirmed by any one who will look out for bird in its haunts, and is all the more interesting as it seems to be an acquired one. The bird is in no way adapted to transport its young through the air.—The Gentleman's Magazine.

AN EDITOR'S TALK.

He Tells What Names Are Popular Among So-Called Literary Women.

An Old Editor: I wonder if any woman ever liked her own name? When I was in the harness I used to have to read all the manuscript that came to the office. Most of our contributors were women. Women, I have sometimes thought, are naturally inclined to literature. I never knew one who didn't drift into writing for the press if she had the slightest encouragement. And when they begin to write of course the first thing they do is to select a nom de plume. These assumed names used to amuse me and I took a fancy one day to keep track of them for one year. At the expiration of that time I discovered that the dame "Maude" led the list. The next was "Lillian," and then they scampered off into the realms of fiction. "Beulah," "Mispah," "Rowena," and the like. Occasionally I found one who assumed a commonplace tag, and I noticed that such a one, as a rule, generally made her way to the front. I wonder whatever became of that long procession of sorrowful-looking creatures who used to come to my desk with great bundles of manuscript and beseech me to examine it and use it, at the same time telling me of the sick children at home who were famishing for bread, and who couldn't get any until "this article" was printed. At first I was soft-hearted and listened to these appeals, but soon found that I had more manuscript on hand than we had columns in the paper. Then I grew hard-hearted. For instance, I would ask one: "How many children have you?" If she said more than two I asked their names. Then I would ask the nature of their diseases and she would tell me. I would take the story and label it, "Katie—measles." Then of the next applicant the same query. Then the label, "Johnny—the mumps," and then I would lay the MSS. away in a pigeon-hole and occasionally I would look them over and wonder how the invalid corps were progressing. When I felt a little womanish in my heart I would select the "disease" which I thought was most dangerous and use it. And then I used to watch the obituary column. But I never saw the announcement of the death of any of the starving ones whose names were on the parchment in my pigeon-holes.—Chicago Tribune.

Copyrighted 1890

The equivalent, in English money, of $2.50 was once offered by an old lady in London for the return of a favorite cat which had strayed or been stolen. People called her a "crank," and perhaps she was. It is unfortunate that one of the gentler sex should ever gain this title, yet many do. It is, however, frequently not their fault. Often functional derangements will apparently change a woman's entire nature. Don't blame such sufferers if they are "cranky," but tell them to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which is an infallible remedy for "female weaknesses." "Favorite Prescription" has cured thousands of poor, bed-ridden suffering women of "female weakness," painful irregularities, ulcerations, organic displacements and kindred ailments too numerous to mention. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will, in every case, give satisfaction or the price ($1.00) will be refunded.

[illegible] a portion of their pictur[illegible] described their cus[illegible] life. He mentioned [illegible] one part of the coun[illegible] to journey to the [illegible] ship and two years [illegible] people had no written [illegible] were entirely and law[illegible] The Eastern Esquimaux had [illegible] rules than the Western [illegible] where many of them had [illegible] a portion of the leg. The [illegible] let their hair loose, and [illegible] it into a high knot to show [illegible] were ready for marriage.

When an Esquimau man fell in love [illegible] special he did not go and pour [illegible] sentiments into her ear—he [illegible] him by the hair of the head [illegible] dragged or pulled her to his hut [illegible] course as soon as Greenland must [illegible] all other places, prefers not to lik[illegible] The women were not considered wel[illegible] married if they did not run back home [illegible] two or three times after being dragged [illegible] away. If they ran away too often the [illegible] did not like it. There is the case [illegible] of a man going over and over again t[illegible] fetch the girl of his choice to his hut, but [illegible] she always ran back. He obtained her [illegible] time, and again tried. The girl [illegible] minds saw him in the distance, and [illegible] they presented her at her request. He [illegible] went away without her, and the next [illegible] day she was missing—she had gone to [illegible] comfort her broken-hearted lover. The [illegible] husband's labor was on the sea, and after the game was caught the women looked after it. The men in the house were, as a rule, very lazy—they did nothing but eat and look after their weapons. The women were always working—either sewing, spinning, making clothes or busy in household work. They looked well after their children, of whom they were very fond. The men, as a rule, married early—as soon as they could catch seals enough to provide for a wife and family. The reasons they gave for marrying were to have the skins of the seals attended to and to keep their clothes in order—of course, there were other reasons.

It very often happened that good catchers on the East coast had two wives. Cases of more than two wives were not known. The reason given for more than one wife was that one wife could not prepare the skins of the seals caught, and that two women had to be used to pull the boat. Sometimes one wife, when she could not manage the work and the house, asked her husband to take another wife. Husband and wife did not kiss, but saluted by pressing noses. Parents never punished their children, and he never heard an Esquimau speak angrily to his children. In spite of this the youngsters behaved very well. A mother suckled her child two years. He had seen a strapping little fellow eating bread, standing by his mother's lap and taking field from the maternal teat. Young girls very often got small knives and learned how to prepare skins. This was very important to the young women, as they had to manage the cutting of the skins. The young boys were also taught to catch seals. There were, of course, weak children, deformed ones, and those who lost their mothers. These were usually thrown outside of the house or into the sea. This was, of course, a very good arrangement, but rather cruel from their point of view. This practice was indulged in in order to get as strong boys and children as possible. Hospitality in Greenland was greater than anywhere else.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

SOUTHERN CHILDREN.

They Were Taught to Be Polite and Treated Every Body Respectfully.

Children in the South were taught respect for their elders, black or white. Disrespectful language to elderly persons, or, as the negroes said, "sassin' uv old possums," was punished more severely than almost any other juvenile offense. No well-bred child ever failed to say "yes'm," "no, ma'am," or "yes, sir," "no, sir."

I think no Northern custom strikes a Southern-bred person so unpleasantly as the freedom with which the children say "yes," "no" and "what" to their elders, though I know it is quite the fashion to ridicule the addition of "sir" or "ma'am" as old-fashioned and rural.

The young children called the older ones "brother" and "sister" as a term of respect. A young lady was always called "miss" by her child acquaintances—"Miss Annie," "Miss Sallie," not "Miss Brown" or "Miss Smith." She was addressed so by her gentlemen friends as well, nothing short of an engagement or the closest intimacy justifying the freedom of calling her by her name.—Home Maker.

How to Preserve Flowers.

Ladies who surround the stems of their corsage bouquets with moistened powdered willow charcoal, which in turn may be wrapped in moss or cotton, will find their flowers remaining fresh long after the departure of all beauty from those of their less thoughtful neighbors. The same substance placed in the bottom of the vase in which flowers are kept will be very useful, provided the stems are cut off with a sharp knife once or twice a day.—Phrenological Journal.

Officer (Society for the Preventing of Cruelty to Children)—"I am hunting for a family who, I am told, are compelling a three-year-old child to learn the Russian language." Resident (Slum Court)—"I know 'em. They live in room 62." Officer (truthfully)—"The brutes! What is their name?" Resident—"Kuoshkiwoskivitz. They are Russians."—N. Y. Weekly.
