CHAPTER V.

Inving the journey to San Paola on the following day, don't Wilcox took the opportantly to have a good long talk with Pency locked and inspectation what they young man knew about the many transactions which had taken place betwoon Velouples and Crandall.

Semetimes the young Englishman. got very communicative for he was naturally a free open-hearted sort of a follow, not more than twenty-seven. years of are, or thereabouts.

Wilcox liked him so well that he asked Lovel to give him a little of his history. Said Lovel: "If I tell you my history you may not think so well of me after you hear it as you do now."

"Oh. I dare say, like most young menwhardrift to Friance, you have led a kinder wild life, but it is evident you were primed with a pretty good education before you started in on it," was the rossisterer

"Yes," said the Englishman, "I suppose that's so, and since I left Oxford 1 have seen life through the kalebloscope of many prominence journeyings. 1 left nome before I was twenty, got through a good plie of money in Paris and Brusarts and then auddenly found myself in New York. I played the races, gambled and knocked around from one job to another and altogether led a Hohemian life. But I fiel like sobering up now; it isn't necessary for a fellow to be n vagalond all his life, and I'm ready for the changes: It isn't more than three weeks since I handled the chips for the last time, but I have done with it for keeps. By the why, the very last game I sat. down to was in the same room that Velasquer frequented and he dropped over five thousand dollars that night. It was the same evening he sold the mining stock. He often used to como to that den, and some of the boys there know a good deal about him, but I very much queetion whether any of them would tell You much

"Good," remarked Lovel's newly found friend, "I'm glad to hear that your are fired of your wild life, and, what's more, I believe you. So from now on you, will please consider yourself. private marginary to Jool Wilcox. I never dil post on airs before, but I puesa l'antit toccold to begin. Is it a

But Mr. Wilcox soon made amondafor his forgetfulness and told Mrs. Delare of the value of his newly-formed acquaintances.

There was much to be said about the. new clew and Velasquez's former history, and Percy warmed up and became almost onthusiastic over his prospective work.

They discussed how every thing should be arranged. On the morrow they proposed to go to the lawyer at Santa Rosa, and inform him of the new fevelopments.

They supposed naturally that Velasquer had little blea of his crime being discovered so soon, if even and that he was probably on his way East. So they did not raise a huc and cry at once. but decided that it would be far where and more prodent, to be sure they were eight before going ahead.

The next day they all started for Santa Rosa, the county scat, where the trial was to be held, and Wilson was at last full of hope that the unfortunate Anton would soon he reh-and.

A consultation was held with the lawyers, but they did not doom it wise to take steps to score a warrant for Velasquez's areat, they also d waits ing until after the trial of Anton Revmean.

At all such acciety events, her presence was looked upon as a positive necessity, until at last the poor girl was almost tired out. No wonder then that she was anxious to get away from it all and seek that reat in New York. which was absolutely impossible at a place like Long Branch.

Just as the concluding words fell from Armida's lips, there was a knock on the door, which was answered. By the maid, who took a card from the bell-boy and handed it to her young mistress.

Armida glanced at it languidly and then turning to her mother with a piteous gue on her sweet face said: "Anothor infliction."

"Who is here now, my doar?"

"That horrid, vulgar Mr. Blodger, who is so fond of saying: "Lalies, Mr. Stophon Blodger at your service."

Here Armida rose from her redlining posture and gave an initation of that wath man's anique sigle of introducing involfation turning to hersmall size anb1

"Tell the boy to show him up." As the boy went away, something like a garging titter sounded as if coming from that progressive youth. In less than a minute the caller was at the parlor door, which showe I that he must have waited either outside, or very near the elevator, for he certainly did not have time to come from the office. The visitor was a man weighing something in the neighborhood of two hundred pounds, and had a face as round and as red as the mitting sun on a winter's day. Step by step he had risen from the lowest ranks, until he had finally attained the mighty distinction of being a millionaire, said millions having been acquired by the practical application of the science of turning tallow into soap. A 28.2 In his early days he had known Mr. Wilcox intimately, and the acquaintance had recently been renewed with pleasure on both sides. Consequently Mrs. Delars and her daughter felt if incumbent upon them to entertain the gentleman when he called. Since converting his scap-bolling business into a stock company and then solling out his interest at an enormous profit. Mr. Blodger had found a great deal of time on his hands. His sife had long since passed to the "herter hand," and as he had no relatives to homeer him he decored the time profigurant, it histown company and that of his fifteen. year old boy, who was, at least physically, following in his father's fost-teps bidding fair to outrival the celebrity of the Fat Boy in Pickwick.

Mother and daughter were sixing in a private parlor forming one of their suite of rooms at the West End Hotel. Long Branch, where they had been spen ling the summer. It was only during the last two years that Mrs. Delaro had enjoyed much of her daughter's soelety, for they had necessarily been thrown very much apart owing to the mother's set determination to personalby nuclear in the sourch for her husband's murlinese.

This employment, which had kept her traveling all the time, combined with the fact that Armida had been attending school at a convent near to Paris gave them very little opportunity of boing together.

Mrs. Delaro really showed very little sorn of the strugglos she had undergone in her features, though a close observes might have noticed a sottled and determined expression which told with out the aid of words that sho was a woman living with a purpose.

And indeed her purpose was stern as ever, for as she sat on this bright.
