

THE POULTRY THIS WINTER.

It is not a good plan to have the poultry too near the pig-pen. Care with poultry does not imply that they should be pampered. Two-thirds lard and one-third coal oil will kill the large body lice. Always begin with a good breed, whether with eggs or with fowls. Keep in filthy quarters will usually make short work of the turkeys. Food can be wasted by giving too little as well as by giving too much. With poultry, as with all other kinds of work, care must be taken not to undertake too much. If a fowl becomes sick separate it from the others and doctor it, as the disease may be contagious. Bad housing or cold, damp, ill-ventilated houses are prevalent causes of disease among the poultry. A good feed for an ailing fowl is parched wheat. It serves as a corrective and also invigorates them. Throw away the egg-shells into the yard where the hens can pick them up as often the cause of the hens learning to eat eggs. When a fowl has developed a full case of cholera there is rarely any profit in attempting a cure, unless the fowl is far above the average in value. It is not wise to feed too little, neither is it wise to feed too liberally. Fowls should only have enough to make them eat up clean all that is thrown to them and to feel more frequently. Waste of food or starving fowls are extremes which every breeder should avoid. Clean, meal and ground oats scalded make an excellent mess for laying hens on cold days. Feed it in the morning, and at night give wheat, allowing an hour or more for the hens to scratch for it, as the proper mode of feeding grain is to throw it in litter, such as leaves or cut straw.
