ABOUT WEALTH.

"The Distribution of Wealth" formed the subject of the lecture before the Economic League Wednesday night, by Pro-fessor Frederic C. Hicks, of the University of Cincinnati, Ohio. He said that, inasmuch as few people produce what they require, they are compelled to ex-change with others, through barter and sale. He did not believe in the Utopian idea of a distribution of wealth according to man's needs, for each man would estimate his own requirements wrongly. A present existing conditions would be overturned. He believed that corporations and business enterprises should be open to public inspection and censorship to prevent abuses.

PERMITS NECESSARY.

County Assessor C. E. McDonald has three deputies in the field making a report of the number of new improvements. Upon these reports will be based the asestate being assessed from the recorded plats. It is found that many persons who put up buildings in the outlying parts of put up buildings in the outlying parts of the city fail to secute a permit from the City Engineer's office, as required by law. In one section, for instance, Deputy as sessor Maxwell states that where twelve buildings have been erected, only three structures were given the necessary permits. Many are doubtless unaware that permits are required even though the party building does not occupy a portion of the street. The law relating thereto has been changed. The permits cost II

Astounding Discovery Improvement Noted Throughin Montana.

(Journal Special Sarvice.)
DILLON, Mont., March 56.—This is the story of one of the most wonderful discoveries of modern times—of the history of the world, in fact, in the saving of the most precious of all our metals. If the discovery meets with the success which is anticipated, if means that millions of dollars in fine kold will be recovered by a process which may sevolutionize modern methods. On the big bench which lies in the Big Hole Dash, a few miles from Wisdom, Moht. there is an immense gladler moralf. It obsers an area of several thousand abres, and tests which have been made show that this immense deposit carries a value of about $2 in gold to the ton.

this immense deposit carries a value of about $2 in gold to the ton.

The gold is as fine as flour, and in this respect it much resembles the gold found on the Snake river, as it will float on water. Time and again have prospectors and miners attempted to save this gold by ground-sluicing, panning, washing it over blankets and every other means known to the placer miner, but all of them met with failure, and it was the conclusion that the gold gould not be saved and that it would lie forever just without the reach of man.

Last year, however, the means of saving the gold was accidentally discovered. The great morain was obserted into a ranch, and among the plows in use was

The great morain was converted into a ranch, and among the plows in use was one of ancient pattern, builted tagether with copper bolts. One day Al. J. Noges, manager of the ranch, noticed something peculiae about the appearance of the bolt hands on the blow. He investigated and found that on each of the bolt hands a chunk of amalgam had formed. He town his knife and pried them off, and lifter it had been retorted it was found that it yielded about 50 cents to each bolt head. Several nuggets of like character were taken from the bolt heads before the plowing was done and the old dump was blowed over and over again.

Now the men who own the ranch think they have settled on the best method of saving the placer gold in the glacier morair. They have had all of their plews copperplated on the underside of the morain. They have had all of their plews copperplated on the underside of the "mould board." The fine dust dropping over the shire deposits the flour gold on the prepared mould boards and they act in the same manner as the plates in a free gold stamp mill. If the Schemo works, as it is thought it will, all that remains to be done is to plate their boards with a thin coating of "quick" amalgam which gathers and retort it. The gentlemen behind the scheme have great hopes of making a success of it
